Some additional comments from Bruce Churchill in California:

Greenland closes SW and MW on Feb 11 2011.
Alas, indeed they are! Even the relatively recent low-power missionary stations that brought back for a fleeting moment rare DX that HCJB and others have supported, never really made it.witness The Cross Radio in Pohnpei (gone), Wantok Radio Light (still on but with much reduced power these days), Radio Peace (supposedly expanding, but not on the air these days), Dunamis Shortwave in Uganda (rarely, if ever heard, with transmitter problems), ELWA (gone again), Radio Veritas Liberia (gone), CRN in PNG (gone), and on and on the list goes. The only one still reliably operating is Radio Kahuzi in DR Congo. The story is the same in most cases - unreliable equipment and a lack of trained staff to support the station technical operations.
(Bruce Churchill-CA-USA, DXplorer Dec 10, Top News)
==========

I was lucky enough to hear and QSL The Cross Radio in Pohnpei, Micronesia on 4755 in 2007.

Unfortunately a short lived operation, and most expected them to fix their antenna problem, but they have yet to return.

I'll trade HFBC for 15,000 web streams. Time marches on. At least now you can participate in ham radio even if you don't have a license.

pskreporter.info

How does your receiver work compared to others? Have a receiver shootout with other SWLs and Hams from your grid square. No license needed! Make

There is a spike in tumor growth on the side of heads where people press their phones. Carotid gland cancer isn't very common.

The "elite" are the people you fight for every waking minute. Using the power of the government to shore up democratic institutions is what a govewrnment responsive to the needs of its people and its Constitution does.

If you love the Constitution, if you love the USA, you have to embrace giving the people more credible facts upon which to base their political activity.

You are free to make stuff up for 55 minutes an hour, if you tell the truth for five minutes, and call it the news. What's the big deal?

Bulbtown dot com has commen incandescents for 50 cents each.
I bought several years supply.
Also a dozen 'appliance' bulbs for range and fridge.
And some S11 profile E17 base 10watt incandescents for hobby (Keystone stereocard viewer).

I wonder if there are going to be exemptions for specialty bulbs?
Let's say slide projector 500 watts lamps?
There isn't going to be LED and CFL for those old timers.
And ditto for those teeny size 49 for Philco radio dials?
Well, they're incandescents!

Do people using PSK have conversations? Or is it mainly just signal reports?

Nobody's going to take away your little light bulbs. However, one wonders why you want to throw money away lighting your rooms.

Why don't you tune in and see? I generally don't rag-chew and DX at the same time, as I'm right on the edge of legible print and this makes casual chit-chat less than casual.

There have been LED replacements for #47 lamps for years. Nice ones, too.
Good and bright, available in green, amber, blue, red and white.. likely others, too. I bought a bunch about 8 years ago. I'm sure the technology has only improved since then. My old RCA wooden case table radio (forget the model ATM) looks really neat with a red dial light.

First, don't just single out PSK; there are many other digital (keyboard-to-keyboard) modes, RTTY, PACTOR and Hellschreiber are just a few that come to mind.

Next, you ask "Is it conversations or signal reports?"

The answer is, yes...both. It can be whatever you like or prefer...although if it is a rare DX station with many waiting, it's bad manners to have a nice chat; just a sig report and make way for the next guy in line.

I've had many nice RTTY and PACTOR chats.

Per Dave's suggestion, to receive PSK or RTTY all you need is your receiver, a computer with a sound card and any one of a variety of free software programs.

Easy and fun...

I don't know how accurate the word 'remnants' is ..... On the other other hand, the hierarchy of the Catholic church is identical to the government structure of the Romans and the Pope has replaced Caesar.

RHFink will now accuse me of antisemitism because I mentioned Romans, who murdered BILLIONS of Jews two thousand years ago, amongst whom were MILLIONS of Jewish children who were wrapped up in Holy Scriptures and burned to death.

Roman bastards......

Abrahimic religions have a major problem, however, as there was NEVER an Abraham, hence a Covenant is impossible.

He did more than that. He gathered up the bigger Christian sects and stuck their leaders together in a forced convention at Nicea.

They were made to blend, compromise and unify all the differing views within their ranks. Then, to make the new religion palatable to Romans, the idea of the 'trinity' was also put at the forefront. The Triune God is more a Roman than Christian concept. It was this newly formed Church that was adopted my Constantine as the official one.

Once a compromise was reached, the writings of the past which disagreed with the new 'Nicene' Creed, were made to disappear. They became illegal. With the power of the State behind the Bishops, enforcement became easy.

There was one huge Catholic church in the Eastern and Western parts of the Empire. That lasted until a bunch of crusaders on the way to fight the Infidels, around 1200 ruined Constantinople and stole everything.

That, understandably, led Constantinople to hate Rome and they split.

All minutia aside, I believe they ARE, at least to the same degree that Christians and Jews are being misled. The origins of these religions and therefore the structures based upon them are shaky at the very best.

I also have a big problem with the masculinity of God. Divine beings have no need of gender. Sexual reproduction is a fairly good way for species to better themselves. God is already perfect and eternal. No sex or gender required. Having a gender would mean God was incomplete.

Would you dress in Heavenly garb and then procreate with chimpanzees in order to better their lot? To make them love you?

The difference in levels between man and monkey is infinitesimally small compared to that between man and God.

Original sin? Sounds more a guilt trip manufactured to make the flock easier to control.

He has enough people who communicate directly with angels calling in without us bothering him.

Weird how it's the most unlikely sorts. I know a few sincere, deeply religious types who have never had that quality of insight to the Divine Realms.

Me? I usually have problems trying to contemplate my own navel.

They even tax foreign aid money......That is obscene.

When Israel's Operation Cast Lead in Gaza ended in January 2009, Palestinians emerged to find that much of their infrastructure, including homes, schools, ministries, water and sanitation networks, energy and telecommunications grids, roads, bridges, and hospitals, had been reduced to rubble.

An estimated 4,100 homes were completely destroyed and over 20,000 shelters were damaged.

According to UNRWA, the UN relief agency, more than 1,000 Palestinian families are still living in temporary tents.

The Palestinian Central Bureau of Statistics estimates the value of damage immediately after the war to be $1.1bn.

The Palestinian Ministry of Planning says that $502mn is needed for immediate and essential infrastructure repairs, while the cost of removing the rubble and damaged buildings will cost upward of $600mn.

At the Sharm El Sheikh conference on reconstruction in March, international donors pledged almost $4.5bn in aid, chiefly to rebuild Gaza.

The control over these funds immediately sparked disputes between Hamas and Fatah, the two rival political parties in Gaza and the West bank respectively, over control of the reconstruction process.

The disputes have delayed delivery of the funds which are also *subject to Israeli scrutiny and taxation. Although the amount of money already pledged to rebuilding Gaza is fairly generous, it may decrease due to a lack of follow-up pressure and a redirection of donor interests and attention.

Old cars.

Back in the 80's Bill Harrah (casinos Vegas, Reno) still had his old car museum, close if not best in the world, Didn't charge but peanuts to see it all.
Then he died and the kids, thankful for inheritance, announced ready to sell.
I remember an expert stood up high platform with megaphone describing anything about the cars when anyone asked.
Lo tech presentation.
Somehow a lot of it was saved and is still a decent exhibit.
Public now.

The Grand Old "Harrah's Car Collection"

I remember the old Harrah's Car Collection [1400 Autos] as being several large Warehouses out in Sparks, NV that I visited in the 1960s and 1970s; back then it could be an all day event do a morning walk-a-round and having lunch and do an afternoon walk-a-round; we was slow walkers and long-lookers with Cameras in hand.

about 200 Autos is call the "National Automobile Museum" http://www.automuseum.org/and is located in the Downtown Reno proper.

The important thing is, Mike, that all of this punishment and relegation of Helen Thomas to Stalinesque "non-person" status -- for "making controversial remarks" -- just goes to prove that her allegations of Zionist control and power are true.

Helen has an axe to grind, after all, she is of Arab descent.

Her neice, Suzanne Geha, has been a local TV personality for many, many years.

http://www.counterpunch.org/carmichael01302006.html

What adds additional interest to the role of Opus Dei and the Catholic Church in US political life is that for many years unconfirmed reports have linked Supreme Court Justices Scalia and Thomas to Opus Dei. In March, 2001, Newsweek reported that the wife of Justice Scalia, "attended Opus Dei's spiritual functions." Justice Scalia's son, Father Paul Scalia, personally mediated the conversion of Justice Clarence Thomas to Roman Catholicism following his confirmation to the Supreme Court.

In recent years, the ultra-conservative jurist Robert Bork has converted to Roman Catholicism. In Washington, speculations about Bork and Opus Dei are relatively common. Other conservative Catholic politicians associated in the popular media with Opus Dei include Senators Sam Brownback and Rick Santorum. While the names of priests and officials of Opus Dei are made public, the identities of the lay members are not matters of public record, making it appear to be a secret organization. This situation leaves a question mark over those markedly conservative Catholics with political prominence.

Thanks for the photos. Now I remember where I saw one. The Arizona State Fair on W. McDowell Road.

1955 was a little before my time. (I was around, but all the cars looked alike from my vantage point.)

The "government" and the "people" are the same thing. When you complain about the government you are complaining about your fellow Americans. The people who hate the government hate America. They are traitors.

As long as energy is priced fairly (i.e. remove all subsidies including military support for stealing oil from poor people and bribes) the true cost will steer people toward efficiency. There is no need to go door to door.

(BTW: they already know how wasteful you are. They scan your house with remote sensing and analyze your billing. They are ostensibly looking for "indoor grows" but they are gathering data patterns in general, as well.

The followers can stay, but religious leaders are an oxymoron and should be retrained in a less dangerous vocation. Religion should be conducted in private, where us normal people don't have to watch. Similar to deviant sex acts.

Very very strange words coming from a self-professed anarchist.

I agree that the government ought to be merely a (small) group of agencies to serve some essential needs that can't be served in any other way, as _employees_ of the citizens, _not_ rulers over them.

But it has grown, like a cancerous tumor, far beyond its constitutional bounds to the point where it is now a power unto itself. In many ways -- like drug possession and other victimless crime "laws," IRS seizure "laws," forced association "laws," and illegal wars, coups, and assassinations all over the planet -- it has actually become the enemy of the people. At least the decent people.

With all good wishes,

Kevin.

That would be a once-great broadcasting organization that has become no friend to shortwave, the BBC.

Once again, anytime there is something oppressive being introduced on its citizens you can be sure its our good friends, the British.

The rotted teethed cadavers in parliament's are excited about the UK's planned changeover to all digital broadcasting in 2013. What morons. Meanwhile their shriveled up hag of a queen isn't even happy about it.

It is a perversion of the original idea. The Founders did not anticipate capitalism, let alone think something like that would be allowed to flourish. If we remove the profit motive from war, and institute public financing for elected offices, we'd be able to get a better handle on the rest.

It really beyond redemption without a complete teardown and reassembly, but she's worth saving. A big-ass general strike and some debt forgiveness would shake things up nicely. Stop everything just long enough to put the moneychangers out of business. I'm guessing less than a week...

MONTREAL ï¿½ Abraham Botines will be the first to tell you he has no idea if a bar of swastika-engraved soap he owns from the Nazi era is really made of human remains.

But the owner of an eclectic curiosity shop in a trendy Montreal neighbourhood makes no apologies about wanting to sell the item -- a rarity that has caused a mini-storm in the Jewish community.

Botines, a Spanish-born Jew who has operated the quirky boutique since 1967, said Friday that no one in his family wants the soap or other controversial war-era items.

So the feisty store owner has decided, given his advanced age and weakening health, that it is time to sell the soap that he bought at top dollar from a retired Canadian soldier.

I've often wondered why the British people have so supinely accepted the now-omnipresent spy cameras that are all over British cities, while at the same time they are almost slitting each other's throats over stupid football games. Seems the police state has them completely cowed -- and frustrated.

With every good wish,

I know. My own very small contribution in stopping the abomination of the Palestine occupation dealt with exactly that. I convinced the guys in the trenching/earth moving section to buy a Hitachi backhoe instead of a Caterpillar. That felt good.

I wonder if Caterpillar has any idea of the hatred being generated against the Trade Mark by the rabid zionists.

Counterfeit Nazi stuff is big business. So are fake American Civil War items. Mormons kill each other for artifacts of suspicious origin.

It's all money. There is even a holocaust industry in New York.
Thousands are cashing in on what should be a non profit venture. I

4949. HOW TO IMPROVE the AGC ... FOR NRD-535

I know someone in this group has the correct procedure? The following were found at various places on the web including the Yahoo groups. I do have the SM.

1. Modification is very simple. You must work on the "CAE-227A IF AMP UNIT" circuit board, connecting an 840k resistor between the positive side of capacitor C104 and the negative side of capacitor C105.

2. I just purchased the AGC mod kit from Kiwa. All it consists of is a small 1/8 watt 910K ohm resistor. You need to locate R105 and R106 on the audio board. You then solder the 910k resistor in parallel across R105 and R106.

3. I also changed the AVC by shorting out one section of R105 so the total resistance was 500 K. R103 and R104 was changed to 100K. After that the AVC was functioning very well in both FAST and SLOW.

4. (SIMILAR TO 3 BUT DIFFERENT) NRD-535 receiver. modifications for the AGC circuit
The mod is simple: shortcircuit R105 or R106 (1 M) and replace R104 (original 1 k) to 100 k.

5. (NRD-525) The AGC is modified, R105 is shorted out - giving 1 Mohm from the remaining R106.

Arthrny,

On the other hand the Palestinians and Arabs have a never ending {countless} supply of AK-47s; Katyusha Rockets; and Scud Missiles that they use to Attack and Terrorize the Israeli Population with : While for the most part the the Israelis only launch defensive counter attacks directed at the point-of-attack.

Do not forget the cross-border tunnels, big enough to smuggle cattle

There are way too many people in this situation...and not just in England. This is from a good web page describing how to make a small steam engine. Worth a visit.

Please help give British engineers, scientists and such like a job.
There are thousands of us forced to emigrate, or become shelf stackers, or like me, who would prefer to be using my B.Ed and B.Sc to be teaching technology, design and science, but am essentially a beggar. Some friends have had to turn to crime, despite being superb British engineers.
I like to help others, hoping it may lead to a job. The last time I helped, government spies tried to strike me off the dole. Helping seems to be increasingly illegal - sad times indeed. Even begging is now illegal under Fuhrer Blair.

http://www.btinternet.com/~jhpart/steam2.htm

Until then, sod politicians and the infestation of their paper obsessed minions. If there is anything you want on the website, or you have problems finding work through being male, overqualified or over forty, please email.

A job, funding or sponsorship desperately needed. Please help the thousands of unemployed British engineers and science graduates. Oh - and thanks for reading this far!

Desperately seek work, funding or sponsorship. Part-time, jobshare, anything - please.

I was just thinking of a home job somebody could do: consulting component engineer.

Clients would tell you approximately what parts they needed. You'd research manufacturers and distributors for appropriate stuff, and could also do cost-saving studies for existing BOMs. One could also get stipends/kickbacks from the vendors and distributors you recommend.

I have a situation, right now, having to do with available thinfilm 0805 resistors [1]. The statement of the problem is fairly simple, but there are hours of work in finding suitable and available parts of the right values and ratios. I'd farm out stuff like that if I could.

John

[1] which, for some reason, don't seem to come in standard E48 or E96 values. They are sort of random.

Capitalism is a nasty byproduct of the Industrial Revolution. I'm not referring to starting a business. I'm talking about "business" controlling everything else. Modern capitalism is a product of activist judges in the late 19th century. It is a perversion of any noble idea of hard work paying off.

I switched to CFL bulbs a long time ago and have never looked back. I was going through incandescent bulbs like crazy. It drove me nuts to be replacing bulbs all the time. I switched to CFL bulbs many months ago and have yet to replace one. I don't know if they'll last as long as the marketing info says they will, but they last one heck of a lot longer than incandescent bulbs. And zero RFI.

There's a pirate not using the usual 69XX kHz.
Was listening to 6900 kHz and Spanish or Portugese pirates are using the frequency in LSB @ 0000UTC.
WBNY is also supposed to be using 6275kHz (not heard here) - maybe a broadcast to Europe?

Share with you my shopping experience at http://www.people-trade.com

Months ago I got an online shop which is http://www.people-trade.com .
before I decided to buy something there, I googled it and find much information about it, some are good, some are bad, after a close consideration, I decided to buy something from it by myself to check if the comments are right or wrong, coz the clothes there are really beautiful, and they have low prices. As long as the the quality is not bad enough that it can only last several days.(actually no one produces this, or anyone sells)

After registering and payment at http://www.people-trade.com , about 2 weeks later (16th Sep), I received a package from a DHL postman.
Now here I am sharing the photo bought there with you, to some point, I love them.

http://www.globaltrade06.com/productinfo2-karen%20millen_43-30496.html
Overall: ★★★★★★★★★
Quality: ★★★★★★★★★
Recommendation: ★★★★★★★★★★

MY WORDS:
These shirt is the first I bought from wholesale dress, It has many colors, I chose the red one, which feels good.chinese style which fits me well, as an Asian.
But before you buy this style, measure the size of yourself,
This was the first time I bought from http://www.people-trade.com .
Anyway this one is good.

About 2 weeks later, I decided to buy for another time, you know I am a shopaholic, and always can help buying fashion clothes.
Here are the photos
(http://www.globaltrade06.com/productinfo1-UGG%201873-02-38909.html)
Overall: ★★★★★★★★
Quality: ★★★★★★★★★★
Recommendation: ★★★★★★★★★

My words: These ugg boots are very close in design, though they have different color, which,of course, bring different feeling when I was wearing them. I shifted to wear them, every time there is always a kind of refreshment. .

Dear friends, if you have ever had this kind of experience, we can share here, you can post your favorite clothes here, and we communicate.

Thank you, and thank http://www.people-trade.com , I hope he wont let me down next time.
I will be back.

Hamburger U is been around for decades, in Oakbrook. This is not a new development.

One of my mentors, some years ago, used to say that most broadcasters became broadcasters because they'd flunked out of Hamburger U.

5 of the GM's I worked with over the years were washouts from Hamburger U. One was so inept, that while working for Jack Hodges, he opened a McDonald's that was so unsuccessful, another one didn't make the attempt in town for another 15 years.

As you can imagine, he was a joy to work for.

As, in fact, are they all.

You obviously have never worked in radio. It is chock full of bitter pricks personifying the Peter Principle in graphic live horror reality every day. Why do you think the on-air talent is so jaded and cynical? It's because they are studying to be managers.

There are some rare exceptions, but we're tracking those "nice guys" down and getting rid of them.

FOXLEAKS: Fox boss ordered staff to cast doubt on climate science

December 15, 2010 8:08 am ET by Ben Dimiero

In the midst of global climate change talks last December, a top Fox News official sent an email questioning the "veracity of climate change data" and ordering the network's journalists to "refrain from asserting that the planet has warmed (or cooled) in any given period without IMMEDIATELY pointing out that such theories are based upon data that critics have called into question."

The directive, sent by Fox News Washington managing editor Bill Sammon, was issued less than 15 minutes after Fox correspondent Wendell Goler accurately reported on-air that the United Nations' World Meteorological Organization announced that 2000-2009 was "on track to be the warmest [decade] on record."

This latest revelation comes after Media Matters uncovered an email sent by Sammon to Fox journalists at the peak of the health care reform debate, ordering them to avoid using the term "public option" and instead use variations of "government option." That email echoed advice from a prominent Republican pollster on how to help turn public opinion against health care reform.

Sources familiar with the situation in Fox's Washington bureau have expressed concern about Sammon using his position to "slant" Fox's supposedly neutral news coverage to the right.

Sammon's orders for Fox journalists to cast doubt on climate science came amid the network's relentless promotion of the fabricated "Climategate" scandal, which revolved around misrepresentations of emails sent to and from climate scientists at the University of East Anglia's Climatic Research Unit.

Michael C. Moynihan | December 14, 2010

Last week, I wrote that the widely-linked article positing that the CIA was behind a Swedish woman's accusation of rape against Julian Assange was authored by a Russian-born, Swedish-domiciled, multi-aliased anti-Semite and Holocaust denier currently writing under the name "Israel Shamir," a.k.a. Adam Ermash or Jöran Jermas. The broader point had little to do with the efficacy or morality of WikiLeaks—there are plenty of debates available on the narrower issue of government transparency; this isn't intended to be one of them—but was concerned with how ideology and confirmation bias (WikiLeaks is a good thing, therefore Assange must be defended, and the CIA has done bad stuff in the past so—cui bono?—Assange's accuser must be a Langley asset) can lead mainstream media figures into the fever swamps of Internet conspiracy theory.

It is worrying enough when journalists, either by accident or design, consort with vulgar figures like Shamir. But it has now been revealed that Israel Shamir, when he is not accusing Assange's accusers of setting CIA honey traps, works with WikiLeaks in an official capacity.

According to reports in the Swedish and Russian media, the broad strokes of which have been confirmed by a WikiLeaks spokesman, Shamir serves as the group's content aggregator in Russia, the man who "selects and distributes" the cables to Russian news organizations, according to an investigation by Swedish public radio. In the newspaper Expressen, Magnus Ljunggren, an emeritus professor of Russian literature at Gothenburg University, outlined Shamir's close ties to WikiLeaks and his position "spreading the documents in Russia." (The article is illustrated with a picture of Assange and Shamir in an unidentified office.)

During an appearance on Echo Moskvy radio, Yulia Latynina, a reporter at the independent newspaper Novaya Gazeta, wondered "What does it mean that Assange is allowing himself to be represented by an extremist?" Latynina also found that the Kremlin-friendly paper working with Shamir to promote the WikiLeaks material had already published "outright lies" Shamir claimed were supported by leaks. According to Latynina, Shamir faked a cable related to Iranian President Mahmoud Ahmadinejad's speech to the United Nations, which supposedly showed collusion amongst those who walked out of the talk in protest. That he would invent such a cable is perhaps unsurprising, considering Shamir has previously written an encomium to the "brave and charismatic leader" of Iran.

So let us quickly recap the foulness of Shamir's political views. As I noted last week, he has called the Auschwitz concentration camp "an internment facility, attended by the Red Cross (as opposed to the US internment centre in Guantanamo)," not a place of extermination. He told a Swedish journalist (and fellow Holocaust denier) that "it's every Muslim and Christian's duty to deny the Holocaust." The Jews, he says, are a "virus in human form" and the Protocols of the Elders of Zion is real.

But wait, there's more!

The Swedish media has identified Shamir's son, a disgraced journalist named Johannes Wahlström, himself accused of anti-Semitism and falsifying quotes, as a WikiLeaks spokesman in Sweden. Indeed, Wahlström has authored stories based on the WikiLeaks material for the newspaper Aftonbladet and is credited as a producer on a recent Swedish public television documentary about the group.

But while being the son of a famous Holocaust denier is perhaps only suggestive—Wahlström is surely not responsible for his father's many sins—his celebrations of his father's work in print and his contributions to Shamir's website suggest ideological affinity.* Indeed, in 2005 Wahlström wrote a story for the leftist magazine Ordfront arguing that Swedish media, not known for being friendly to the Jewish state, was in fact being manipulated by Jewish interests on behalf of the Israeli government.

Three of the journalists interviewed for the story—Cecilia Uddén, Lotta Schüllerqvist, and Peter Löfgren—claimed that Wahlström falsified quotes, leading the magazine to withdraw the story and issue an apology. Heléne Lööw, a historian of fascism and European neo-Nazism, commented that the Wahlström story contained all the "elements that one would find in a classic anti-Semitic conspiracy theory."

A member of Ordfront's editorial board, writing in the newspaper Dagens Nyheter, lamented that the piece was ever published, citing Wahlström's "close working relationship with Israel Shamir," without pointing out just how close the two were.

Wahlström and Shamir, father and son, are the WikiLeaks representatives for two rather large geographic areas. According to Swedish Radio's investigation, Wahlström is the gatekeeper of the cables in Scandinavia, and "has the power to decide" which newspapers are provided access and what leaks they are allowed to see. (At the time of filing, Wahlström had yet to respond to an email request for comment.)

In Russia, the magazine Russian Reporter says that it has "privileged access" to the material through Shamir, who told a Moscow newspaper that he was "accredited" to work on behalf of WikiLeaks in Russia. But Shamir has a rather large credibility problem, so Swedish Radio put the question directly to WikiLeaks spokesman Kristinn Hrafnsson.

Swedish Radio: Israel Shamir…Are you aware of him? Do you know him?

Kristinn Hrafnsson, Wikileaks spokesman: Yes. Yes, he is associated with us.

SR: So what is his role?

Hrafnsson: Well, I mean, we have a lot of journalists that are working with us all around the world. And they have different roles in working on this project. I won't go into specifics into what each and everybody's role is.

SR: Are you aware of how controversial Israel Shamir is in an international context?

Hrafnsson: There are a lot of controversial people around the world that are associated with us. I don't really see the point of the question.

SR: Are you aware of the allegations that he is an anti-Semite?

Hrafnsson: I have heard those allegations…yes, yes. [Pause] What is the question really there?

SR: The question is, do you that that would [sic] be a problem?

Hrafnsson: No, I'm not going to comment on that.

Strip away the caginess and the obfuscation—remember, no one is allowed secrets but WikiLeaks—and Hrafnsson, who took over spokesman duties when Assange was jailed last week, confirms that WikiLeaks chose Shamir to work with their Russian media partners. After its investigation, the Swedish Radio program Medierna concluded flatly that "Israel Shamir represents WikiLeaks in Russia."

The forthcoming splinter group, OpenLeaks, led by WikiLeaks veterans tired of Assange's dictatorial style and obsession with being the organization's public face, claims to not be motivated by a particular set of political beliefs and promises to be transparent about its own operations and finances, something which WikiLeaks has been consistently—and credibly—attacked over. For those who think that leaking is, generally speaking, a positive thing, they should welcome an organization divorced from the ridiculous and amateur figure of Assange.

It's necessary for an organization like WikiLeaks, which claims to be creating new types of journalism (we do "scientific journalism," Assange declared triumphantly), to adhere to the basic principles of journalism. When asked about Shamir, Hrafnsson ducks and weaves, pretending that he is, like Assange, just a "controversial" figure, not an anti-Semite and semi-literate Holocaust denier with ties to both the extreme right and left and a well-documented penchant for lying.

So let’s treat the WikiLeaks organization like the journalists they insist they are, and ask the question put forward by Novaya Gazeta reporter Yulia Latynina: Out of all the competent journalists who are sympathetic to the WikiLeaks mission, why have Wahlström and Shamir—one a disgraced journalist, the other an extreme racist—been trusted with the largest intelligence leak in history?

* - Soon after this piece was published, Wahlström told Swedish public radio that his "father is what I would call the Swedish equivalent to Salman Rushdie," noting that he is a "very polemical" person, which must contain both the most profane comparison and biggest understatement of the year.

No credible critics question the data, nor the conclusion that it's getting warmer. To insinuate otherwise with clever amorphous language is disingenuous (to be polite).

The not-insane controversy is about our contribution to the warming and whether there is anything we can do (besides getting our affairs in order). Personally, I agree with Mike Ruppert; economic collapse might save the planet. Good times.

"Just as the Left was drawn to the communist killing machines of Lenin, Stalin, Mao, Pol Pot, and Castro, so too it is now attracted to radical Islam."

"The contempt that German Hitlerytes had for "Bolshevism" or "marxist Jews" generally should also not mislead us in assessing the similarity between National Socialism and Communism. Leftist sects are very prone to rivalry, dissension, schism and hatred of one-another. One has only to think of the Bolsheviks versus the Mensheviks, Stalin versus Trotsky, China versus the Soviet Union etc. Similarity does not preclude rivalry. Hitler and Stalin were literally brothers in arms BEFORE they became rivals. That socialist brothers sometimes fall out should not prevent us from noting the brotherhood concerned."

"The fundamental dogma of all brands of socialism and communism is that the market economy or capitalism is a system that hurts the vital interests of the immense majority of people for the sole benefit of a small minority of rugged individualists. It condemns the masses to progressing impoverishment. It brings about misery, slavery, oppression, degradation and exploitation of the working men, while it enriches a class of idle and useless parasites."

"This doctrine was not the work of Karl Marx. It had been developed long before Marx entered the scene. Its most successful propagators were not the Marxian authors, but such men as Carlyle and Ruskin, the British Fabians, the German professors and the American Institutionalists. And it is a very significant fact that the correctness of this dogma was contested only by a few economists who were very soon silenced and barred from access to the universities, the press, the leadership of political parties and, first of all, public office. Public opinion by and large accepted the condemnation of capitalism without any reservation."

Dr. Ludwig von Mises - http://mises.org/midroad.asp

"The term 'planning' is mostly used as a synonym for socialism, communism, and authoritarian and totalitarian economic management. Sometimes only the German pattern of socialism-Zwangswirtschaft-is called planning, while the term socialism proper is reserved for the Russian pattern of outright socialization and bureaucratic operation of all plants, shops, and farms. At any rate, planning in this sense means all-around planning by the government and enforcement of these plans by the police power. Planning in this sense means full government control of business. It is the antithesis of free enterprise, private initiative, private ownership of the means of production, market economy, and the price system. Planning and capitalism are utterly incompatible. Within a system of planning production is conducted according to the government's orders, not according to the plans of capitalists and entrepreneurs eager to profit by best filling the wants of the consumers.

"But the term planning is also used in a second sense. Lord Keynes, Sir William Beveridge, Professor Hansen, and many other eminent men assert that they do not want to substitute totalitarian slavery for freedom. They declare that they are planing for a free society. They recommend a third system, which, as they say, is as far from socialism as it is from capitalism, which, as a third solution of the problem of society's economic organization, stands midway between the two other systems, and while retaining the advantages of both, avoids the disadvantages inherent in each.

"These self-styled progressives are certainly mistaken when they pretend that their proposals are new and unheard of. The idea of this third solution is very old indeed, and the French have long since baptized it with a pertinent name; they call it interventionism. Hardly anybody can doubt that history will link the idea of social security, more closely than with the American New Deal and with Sir William Beveridge, with the memory of Bismarck whom our fathers did not precisely describe as a liberal. All the essential ideas of present-day interventionist progressivism were neatly expounded by the supreme brain-trusters of imperial Germany, Professors Schmoller and Wagner, who at the same time urged their Kaiser to invade and to conquer the Americas. Far be it from me to condemn any idea only on account of its not being new. But as the progressives slander all their opponents as old-fashioned, orthodox, and reactionary, it is expedient to observe that it would be more appropriate to speak of the clash of two orthodoxies; the Bismarck orthodoxy versus the Jefferson orthodoxy.

Dr. Ludwig von Mises - 1952 - http://mises.org/books/planningforfreedom_mises.pdf

The origins of the modern left can be traced back to the famous passage in Rousseau's Discourse on the Origin and Foundations of Inequality, in which he condemned the institution of private property:

"The first man, who after enclosing a piece of ground, took it into his head to say, 'this is mine,' and found people simple enough to believe him, was the real founder of civil society."

Added Rousseau: "How many crimes, how many wars, how many murders, how many misfortunes and horrors, would that man have saved the human species, who pulling up the stakes or filling up the ditches should have cried to his fellows: Beware of listening to this impostor; you are lost, if you forget that the fruits of the earth belong equally to us all, and the earth itself to nobody!"

Around the 1830s, a faction of French liberals gravitated toward Romanticism and the philosophy of the late Rousseau, proclaiming that capitalism, private property, and the increasing complexity of modern society were agents of moral decay -- both for the individual and for society at large. This is essentially the worldview that has made its way, through history, into the collective mind of the modern left; it is a worldview calling for a revolution that not only will topple the existing capitalist order and punish its corrupt leaders, but that also will replace that order with a socialist regime where the utopian ideals of perfect justice and equality will reign. Such an ambition can be put into effect only by a totalitarian state with the authority to micromanage every facet of human life, precisely the end-point toward which the policies and crusades of the modern left are directed.

When the term "liberalism" (from the Latin word liberalis, meaning "pertaining to a free man") first emerged in the early 1800s, its hallmarks were a belief in individual rights, the rule of law, limited government, private property, and laissez faire economics. These would remain the defining characteristics of liberalism throughout the liberal epoch (generally identified as the period of 1815-1914). Yet the modern left, which portrays itself as the agent of enlightened commitment to "liberal" causes, in fact stands for the antithesis of each of the foregoing liberal ideals. Contrary to its self-definition, the left is neither "liberal" nor "progressive," but rather a reactionary force that seeks to resurrect the traditions that characterized the epoch which preceded the rise of classical

The following is from The World Book Encyclopedia, 1947 edition:
The chief characteristics of Fascism are as follows:

THE CULTIVATION OF IGNORANCE

Fascism, like all forms of government, rests firmly on the sincere consent of a large part of the population... To maintain this consent, the Fascist leadership must cut off the people from any information which might cause them to doubt the complete correctness of the fixed Fascist principles... All forms of communication are carefully censored, so that the public will receive only those facts that the dictators want known... Travel to other countries must be controlled, and freedom of speech and assembly must be rigorously suppressed...

http://www.americanthinker.com/blog/2010/10/arrest_warrant_filed_for_rahms.html http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=sce0TLA5UYE
http://bigjournalism.com/dloesch/2010/10/13/exclusive-cbs2-reporter-threatens-journalist-over-rahm-questioning/

SUPPRESSION OF LABOR AND INDUSTRY

Fascism in Italy and Germany at first won the support of the wealthy classes, both landed and industrial... These people saw in Fascism a protection against the demands of farmers and other workers... Both regimes at first upheld the rights of private property... They subjected the working classes to a rigorous discipline... As soon as they were firmly established, the dictators began to limit profit, impose capital levies, and regulate business in great detail...

Employment Rates under Liberal Fascism
http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=9ssIhiD8kKM

THE POLICE STATE

Fascism depends upon the police to crush all opposition or dissent. Secret police spy on the whole population, and any casual remark against the regime leads to swift and severe punishment... Opposition parties are dissolved. Intellectual, athletic and recreational organizations are usually brought under the control of the Fascist authority... The ruthlessness of the police gradually becomes less noticeable... This is because within a year or so after a Fascist government takes power, vigorous opponents of the regime have either left the country, been killed or jailed...

(Both Fascist and Communist leaders make use of the police state... Every absolute government has used the police state to some degree...

It was highly developed among the ancient Assyrians...)

EXTREME NATIONALISM

Fascism is highly nationalistic... It tries to identify its principles with the country, so that disagreement will look like treason... Some other country, or some group within the country, is chosen to serve as the "enemy" and made to appear as the cause of all evils or misfortunes... For example, the Nazis in Germany represented their movement first as a crusade against the Jews, then as a fight against Communism and later as a struggle against the "attacks" from whatever neighboring country they wished to subdue or occupy... Extreme nationalism often becomes a kind of racial fanaticism... Sometimes it combines racial and religious bigotry...

When you hear the Liberal Fascist JackAss propaganda that THEY are the true patriots then you know the time is near. Look for it from the socialist Labor Unions such as the SEIU!
http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/groupProfile.asp?grpid=6535

MILITARISM

Fascism maintains among the people a permanently warlike frame of mind... Every citizen feels that he is mobilized against enemies of the regime from within, and against possible foreign foes... The dictator usually comes to power during a period of economic crisis or depression... He relieves the depression partly by employing many people in the making of armaments... To justify this procedure, he must convince the people that the country is threatened, and must point toward some of the enemies against whom the armaments may be needed...

Listen to 0baMa0's rhetoric and his fascistic support from the Liberals
.....sound..familiar?.....

Here are the Three (3) Phases of Liberal Decay into Fascism:

1. Liberalism (Well Meaning, Nice Sounding, "Do-Gooder" Policies Always Doomed to Fail)

2. Liberal-Progressivism (The Drive for Social Improvement through Change and Promising Hope;
More Draconian Liberal Polices are Implemented to Transform The People into a New Society that

3. Liberal-Fascism (The Rise of the Party Leader over 'The Party' Ensuring the Unity and Uniformaty of 'The Party' and Enforcing The Will of 'The Party' Over the People.) The Party Leader will Cleanse 'The Party' of All those Who Are NOT of 'The Party'; and 'The Party'

I believe ALL the documents wikileaks is disclosing are true and accurate. While Julian Assange should be given credit for a worthwhile public service, it is the documents which are of true importance.

Julian Assange is more of a patriot than a lot of Americans I share this country with. Hopefully, he will give more the courage to become whistleblowers and provide legal American citizens with much more information we can use to make sound decisions.

A major problem is with our public servants, representatives, senators, president, etc., calling themselves "our leaders." The damn delusional fools are nothing more than our public servants, and treasonous ones at that. We need to get rid of these imbeciles and get some honest public servants in office who will take their orders from the only legal and valid government of the USA -- we the people!

There are plenty credible critics that question the data. And I wonder why MediaMatters would leave this part of the email out, "It is not our place as journalists to assert such notions as facts, especially as this debate intensifies."

There is no debate concerning that this year is the hottest ever recorded. That is a fact. That is why they are called records.

Granted, there may be a few official thermometers from long ago with suspect data (such as so-called record highs in Africa back in the 1930s), but we've been measuring this stuff from satellites fro 40 years now, and that data is golden.

Getting all emotional while denying climate change betrays brainwashing by Exxon Mobil. Facts are well known to have a liberal bias.

Olbermann, Assange, and the Holocaust Denier - When you want to believe, you'll believe anything.

It now seems that the smears in the Julian Assange rape case are bidirectional, from the exceptionally flimsy charges accusing the WikiLeaks boss of being a sexual predator to the increasingly loud and incoherent conspiracy theories suggesting that his two accusers are working on behalf of the CIA.

Before Assange was remanded to custody in the United Kingdom, awaiting a possible extradition to Sweden to face multiple sexual assault charges, his most credulous supporters switched tactics, from attacking the overly broad Swedish conception of rape to suggesting one of his alleged victims moonlights as an American agent; downshifting from Camille Paglia to Three Days of the Condor.

Here’s how an evidence-free, innuendo-filled personal attack on a rape accuser trespasses the mainstream political debate. On his Twitter feed, MSNBC host Keith Olbermann (162,000 followers) links to a rambling blog post arguing that Anna Ardin, the Swedish feminist who accused Assange of rape, is an anti-Castro activist with connections to CIA front groups.

Elsewhere on the Internet, NYU professor [911 "Truther"] Mark Crispin Miller,

http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/individualProfile.asp?indid=2015
http://www.keywiki.org/index.php/Mark_Crispin_Miller

the popular liberal website FireDogLake, Bianca Jagger

http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/printgroupProfile.asp?grpid=7372

and The First Post (a British news website “brought to you by The Week”) all circulated the charges without an ounce of skepticism.

I have previously written that, knowing what we know about the charges Assange faces (which is admittedly not that much), it seems likely that he’s a victim of both an overzealous Swedish prosecutor and a culture that embraces an exceptionally broad definition of sexual assault. But this isn’t enough for the conspiracists and paranoiacs, who see Assange as the torchbearer for transparency, the world’s only hope for crippling American power. If American intelligence could dream up COINTELPRO, they could surely convince a pair of left-wing political activists to lure Assange into a “honey trap,” right?

So what’s this evidence of CIA perfidy that Olbermann finds so convincing?

A few clicks in and one comes to an article posted on Alexander Cockburn’s far-left website Counterpunch

http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/individualProfile.asp?indid=1065
http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/groupProfile.asp?grpid=6444
http://www.keywiki.org/index.php/Alexander_Cockburn by the writers Israel Shamir and Paul Bennett (more on them in a moment) positing that because Ardin, who wrote a master’s thesis on the Cuban opposition movement, visited the "Ladies in White"—a group comprised of female relatives of jailed Cuban dissidents—while conducting research in Havana, and the vile extremist Cuban exile Luis Posada Carriles (who was once employed by the CIA) went to a Miami protest on behalf of the Ladies in White, it follows that Ardin is therefore connected to the CIA. Got that? In 2007, the Ladies in White were presented with the Sakharov Prize for Freedom of Thought from the European Parliament, raising the tantalizing possibly that Ardin is also an agent of Brussels.

Olbermann is sufficiently convinced that this connection merits your attention. This odious type of guilt-by-six-degrees-of-separation is so strained, so unbelievably lunk-headed, that normally I would suggest that it best be ignored. But when Olbermann spreads this poison, and when a mainstream liberal website like FireDogLake gets in on the act, it’s worth forcefully debunking.

Shamir scoffs at the idea that Ardin “is often described by the media as a ‘leftist,’” suggesting her mildly critical remarks about the Castro dictatorship expose her as a reactionary (I previously outlined her politics here). But reading her writings on Cuba, it’s clear that while she isn’t a Castro hagiographer (how could one be, especially a self-identified feminist?) ,Ardin persists with some fairly conventional left-wing views of the regime. “Since the 1959 revolution and communist takeover,” she has written, “healthcare and education are free, there are few or no starving or living on the street, and largely needn’t worry about violence or robbery. But salaries are extremely low.” Indeed, she sees a moral equivalence between the United States and the Cuban dictatorship, sighing that “The social democratic opposition—Corriente Socialista Democrática Cubana—is trying to show that there is an alternative between the only two clearly presented, extreme alternatives: either Castro and his gang govern Cuba or the USA does.”

So who is Israel Shamir, Counterpunch's resident intelligence correspondent?

http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/individualProfile.asp?indid=2457

Alternately known as Jöran Jermas and Adam Ermash, Shamir is a fringe writer who has devoted his professional life to exposing the supposed criminality of “Jewish power," a paranoid anti-Semite who curates a website full of links to Holocaust denial and neo-Nazi sites, defenses of blood libel myths, and references to the Protocols of the Elders of Zion. Ali Abunimah, Hussein Ibish, and Nigel Parry have warned their fellow Palestinian activists to avoid contact with Shamir, citing his frequent forays into the sewers of Jew-hatred. The British anti-fascist magazine Searchlight (along with its Swedish sister magazine Expo) showed that Shamir is a “Swedish anti-Semite” who has repeatedly lied about his past, not a truth-telling Israeli dissident.

http://www.searchlightmagazine.com/index.php?link=template&story=6

Spend a few minutes on Shamir’s website and here's some of what you'll learn: Imprisoned neo-Nazi Ernst Zundel is a “German political prisoner of Zion”; Maria Poumier, a French Holocaust denier whose work Shamir publishes, claims that the “Nazi-jewish H[olocaust] was just a civil war between European brothers”; Shamir himself believes that the Holocaust “narrative is Jewish, it belongs to Jews, and it has no meaning but as manifestation of Jewish supremacy.” Shamir also asserts that the pro-Nazi historian David Irving “was sentenced [to prison] for denial of Jewish superiority,” warning his readers of “Jewish mind-control on a world scale.” On the Auschwitz death camp, Shamir says that “The camp was an internment facility, attended by the Red Cross (as opposed to the US internment centre in Guantanamo).”

Shamir's co-author on the Assange piece, a nonentity called Paul Bennett, is new to the crackpot scene, it would seem, though one gets a sense of his intellectual rigor from a review he contributed to Amazon.com denouncing Aleksandr Solzhenitsyn’s classic Gulag Archipelago as “100% pure reaganaut (sic) political propaganda.”

http://www.amazon.com/Gulag-Archipelago-1918-1956-Aleksandr-Solzhenitsyn/product-reviews/0060007761?pageNumber=7

You get the idea.

I suspect if confronted, Olbermann would argue that he was unaware that the article’s author was a spittle-flecked anti-Semite and Holocaust denier. And I would believe him. But here is Olbermann’s (completely justified) attack on Fox News' Glenn Beck, after the wild-eyed host quoted the long-forgotten anti-Semite Elizabeth Dilling on his radio show. Beck later backtracked, claiming that he was unaware of Dilling's anti-Semitic, pro-Nazi connections:

[Beck] held up and praised a book supposedly outing communists in America called "The Red Network," written by Elizabeth Dilling in 1934 and said, "this is a book—and I'm getting a ton of these—from people who were doing what we're doing now. We now are documenting who all these people are. Well, there were Americans in the first 50 years of this nation that took this seriously, and they documented it."

Oops. Elizabeth Dilling also was an anti-Semite, a supporter of Hitler. She blamed the Second World War on the Jews….Beck says she was, quote, doing what we're doing now. Ruh-roh. But Beck has now explained it all away. Elizabeth Dilling was a rabid anti- Semite, pro-Nazi, doing what you're doing now? "I don't know, because I didn't look it up."

Olbermann is right, of course. But see how easy this game is? Israel Shamir is Olbermann's Elizabeth Dilling. And by helping enter this absurd conspiracy theory into the bloodstream of the left-wing blogophere, Olbermann has assisted in promoting the sinister views of an unreconstructed anti-Semite.

The attacks on Ardin show how, with the help of a mainstream figure like Olbermann, easily falsifiable personal attacks are like a game of telephone, becoming mangled truths for the partisan shock troops. One blogger writes that it "turns out that the guy (sic) who accused him may have been a CIA agent." Over at the Daily Kos, a "diarist" writes that "Not only is she NOT a leftie she is an extreme right wing CIA operative of some type." That Ardin works for a left-wing political party and confesses that were it not for their accommodating policy towards Castro she would defect to the former communists (Vänsterpartiet) makes little difference. Why let the truth intervene when one can defend Assange and blame Washington in one fell swoop?

It is interesting to note that the Swedish media, which can always find column inches for a conspiracy theory involving those mustache-twisting, cat-stroking boffins at the CIA, have said almost nothing about the Ardin-as-CIA agent smears. Because they know a thing or two about Shamir's credibility (he lives in Stockholm) and chuckle at the idea that Ardin, a deeply ideological social democrat who once advised her blog readers on how to wreak revenge on uncooperative former paramours, is an American intelligence asset.

Postscript: One more bit of misinformation that requires clarification. Olbermann, who seems happy regurgitating anything repeated on a lefty blog, writes that "The term 'rape' in Sweden includes consensual sex without a condom." No it doesn't. I confess, though, that when I wrote about the condom story a few months back—in a defense of Assange—I quoted the Guardian's bowdlerization of the condom claim but failed to clarify that this "consensual, unprotected sex is illegal” meme is nonsense.

Update: Keith Olbermann tweets "If the author of that article is a holocaust denier, I repudiate him and what he wrote, and apologize for retweeting the link."

Michael C. Moynihan is a senior editor of Reason magazine.

'Special Dave' - True "Democracy" is often called . . .
the 'Tyranny of the Majority' !

So 'Special Dave' it is all good when the Enlightened Atheists-Socialists "impose" by force the 'Tyranny of the Majority'

-but- It is Bad when Deist Believers in the Deity
-aka- The Faithful "self-and-impose" through free association the same 'Tyranny of the Majority'

'Special Dave' sound like 'you' have a double standard as to what is a "'Tyranny of the Majority"; when it comes by ?WHO? are the Imposers.

A fear expressed variously by Plato, Aristotle, Madison, Tocqueville, and J. S. Mill. If the majority rules, what is to stop it from expropriating the minority, or from tyrannizing it in other ways by enforcing the majority's religion, language, or culture on the minority?
Madison's answer in The Federalist is the best known. He argued that the United States must have a federal structure. Although one majority, left to itself, would try to tyrannize the local minority in one state or city and another majority, left to itself, would do the same in another, in a country as large and diverse as the United States there would not be one national majority which could tyrannize over a national minority.
But if there was, the powers which the states retained would be a bulwark against it. The separation of powers among legislature, executive, and judiciary at federal level would be a further protection against majority tyranny.

Every population everywhere in the world, with very few exceptions, lives on land their ancestors took from someone. North American Indians regularly invaded each other's places, killed or enslaved (or sometimes ate) their enemies and did all the foul and obnoxious things done by peoples all over the earth. The United States is a good place to live. Indians lost a great deal when Europeans occupied the Americas, but that was a long time ago and no one now feels the least impulse to do anything about it. Give it up, live well, and be happy.

Have you ever been to http://www.24hours-online.com what do you think of it?

Hi dear friends, actually I am here to get some tips of shopping online, Recently, I am planning to open up a small fashion shop, when every thing is ready I?ve got to find a supplier. These day when I am strolling at some fashion forums http://www.24hours-online.com, there are many comments about http://www.24hours-online.com I even notice some are just like me waiting to get more information of that.
Anyway their prices are really tantalizing, as for me, a newly fashion clothes beginner. But since it is my first time, I am doing it cautiously.

So I am doing a survey, are you vote for or against http://www.24hours-online.com
I need advices, coz you know more about http://www.24hours-online.com.

Thanks a bunch.

I'm hoping for total economic collapse, followed by an agrarian utopia for the survivors.

Wikipedia is useless. Corporations pay people to rewrite Wikipedia articles, overnightly sometimes. Read the date of the last revision. Who changes these pages every day? Who changes them back? How can you have any confidence in such a thing?

There are no peer-reviewed studies that suggest anything that contradicts the global warming conventional wisdom. There are crazies with letters after their names hired by Exxon Mobil, but they are not mainstream climate scientists.

Spain before Mexico. Denmark before Spain. Central Asians before the South Pole. Luckily, the people still own most of the land in the

We should have adopted more of their lifestyle. They would never have allowed global eco-disaster. Soon we'll be living like "savages" anyway.

They weren't above saying what they thought the great unwashed wanted to hear, even in 1789. The paintings are photoshopped.

Washington, America's first president, did attend church services during his adulthood, but refused to take Communion. When told by the priest that he was setting a bad example by attending but refusing to participate he chose to stop going altogether. So while he may not have been expressly an atheist, religion was clearly not something that weighed heavily on his mind and politics. Being religiously pious may be viewed by some as an essential characteristic of an American president today, but the man regarded as "The Father of America" was anything but.

Jefferson, author of the Declaration of Independence and America's third president, was adamantly opposed to the establishment of a state-sponsored church. It was he who wrote the Virginia Statute for Religious Freedom. This document was the primary inspiration for the First Amendment to the US Constitution which forbade the establishment of any religion by the state.

Admittedly, Jefferson was more of a deist than an all-out atheist. However, Darwin's majestic theory of evolution by natural selection would sadly not be published in his lifetime. Considering Jefferson's brilliant scientific mind, being aware of and understanding that theory may have pushed him strongly into atheist territory.

Lincoln, the man who signed the Emancipation Proclamation into law, was also not consoled by supernatural ideas. After the death of his son he was understandably devastated. One of the reasons for this despair was the idea that there was no 'next life' after this one. He believed his son was gone forever and dismissed any notion of an afterlife (a view that was not shared by his wife, who tried all kinds of supernatural ideas in order to feel a connection with her lost child). Lincoln never made any public pronouncements of faith, yet is still regarded by a vast number of Americans as the greatest president the nation has ever had.

Mercedes was the daughter of Benz, of Daimler-Benz. Daimler-Benz makes Mercedes-Benz cars....actually I think their name is just Daimler since they sold off Chrysler.

Mercedes was the daugher of Emil Jellinek, Gottlieb Daimler's distributor in Nice, France. The cars were named Mercedes in her honor, when Daimler sought a name for the line. The first use of the name was in 1900, registered as a model name for Daimler built cars in 1902 24 prior to the merger with Benz.

He must have been trying to save American face, kinda like the Beatles saying Elvis is King.

Many companies Alexander writes about were new or only vaguely familiar to me, Katayama Industries produced the Olympus motorcycle, Mizuho Motor manufactured the Cabton motorcycle plus Shinmeiwa Industries, Showa Manufacturing and more, all are part of a long history of Japanese motorcycles you've most likely heard little about.

http://thekneeslider.com/archives/2008/07/16/japans-motorcycle-wars/

He discusses Rikuo, also, and their Harley connection.

If you care to look at a 1920s or 30s Japanese motorcycle you will see startling influences from our own iconic machinery. Overhead cam motors redolent of a racing Velo, lusty pushrod singles strangely similar to a Matchless or AJS; everything was analysed, studied and in most cases copied; there are even pre-war versions of Harley-Davidsons.

Well, that would be a convenient spin.

This is the same Sōichirō Honda who said in 1979, that it's time that Japan buried the American tyrants who were too stupid to realize they'd been bested. Who were too incompetent to build a decent motor, let alone a motor car.

Yes, I can certainly see where such humility would be within his character.

And Elvis WAS King.

Hi,

As of today, the donwload link is broken. I do have the version of the program downloaded in November (v2 BETA, dated Dï¿½c. 2008 !) from that site, but found some bugs and reported it to the author. Perhaps a new version will be ready soon ? By the way this version was pretty cool to use, showing directly parallel frequencies of broadcasters, distance from transmitter (in 50% of the cases), etc...

I can provide you with the ZIP file if required, unless the EIBIview author reads this and tells not to do so.

Even the eibi.txt file download stalls at about 5890 kHz. Could be the web site is under attack from listing all the Chinese jammer frequencies.

The by time file works fine. What you might want to do is clear any temporary internet files you have. I've found that to work when the download stalls.

Hi,

Thanks for offer; nice of you.

I have EibiView 20, but guess I'll just wait to see if anything newer appears. Hope so.

It's a really nice program, but should have some way of downloading and incorporation the latest, like when the "a" sch. changes to the "b" seasonal one, etc.

Regards,
Bob

Mr. Jefferson rewrote the Bible, removing all the supernatural crap;

Why am I helping subsidize a religion I don't believe in (not to mention the POS Salvation Army)? This is tyranny of the majority.

Thanks, for the heads-up, Larry.

JACKSON, MS (WLBT) - Several lucky children went on the journey of a life-time Thursday. Through the help of the Mississippi Air National Guard's 172nd Airlift Wing some of the Salvation Army's Angel Tree children took a simulated flight to the "North Pole."

More than 60 children traveled in a United States Air Force C-17 to Santa's workshop for a Christmas they will never forget. An army of elves welcome their special guests to the North Pole.

Each child was led to Santa and called by name to sit on his lap. "You know how special you are to come here? We don't let just anyone come here," said Santa Claus.

After a hug from St. Nick the elves brought around the toys. Four year old Gabriel got a pink scooter and a sack full of gifts. For her mom it's a Christmas wish come true.

It's all perfectly normal and legal in some Mormon communities. The old perverts even drive young men away to lessen the competition.

One of the pervert bastards in British Columbia has over a hundred children. The wives collect welfare and turn the monthly cheque over to the 'husband'. That's a minimum of twenty thousand a month income for the reprobate harem master.

RHF will now accuse me of preaching hate against persons of faith. He must be Mormon.

The company parent, Denmark-based Danfoss A/S, is consolidating operations in Monterrey, Mexico, plant business manager Tim Oï¿½Grady said.

The 35,000-square-foot Buda plant, which makes parts for energy-efficient heating, cooling and ventilation systems, will continue operating at full capacity with all three shifts until the plant closes in December, Oï¿½Grady said.

The Buda plant was efficient and profitable, and the closure is not a reflection of anything beyond the company consolidating manufacturing with logistics and warehousing bases in Mexico, he said.

- It's all perfectly normal and legal in some Mormon communities.

Mike [M II] NO in general that is a Lie.
-only-if- some means <5%

- The old perverts even drive young men away
- to lessen the competition.

Mike [M II] - ?perverts?

- One of the pervert bastards in British Columbia
- has over a hundred children.

Proving That God Can Work Wonders - Amen.

- The wives collect welfare and turn the monthly
- cheque over to the 'husband'.

So Mike [M II] in your Canada only the right kind of 'people' are deserving of Social Welfare; and Mormons and Christians are NOT those people.

- That's a minimum of twenty thousand a month
- income for the reprobate harem master.

1 Husband/Father + 12 Wives/Mothers + 100 Children
=== 113 People

$20,000 / 113 People / 30 Days comes to ~$5.90 per Day to House and Feed each and every one of them in the Cold of Canada. Sounds very reasonable to me.

Mike [M II] - After All Isn't Canada a Great Liberal superior to the Capitalist Free Market USA !?!

Mike [M II] -aka- The Canadian Preacher of Hate,

And All had their Faith in GOD
* Amen To That !

2 - But to your Atheist-Socialist Mind

The Wives to have NO Husband
The Children to have NO Father
Them All To Be GOD-Less Atheists
Them All To Be GOD-Less Socialist Atheists
* Just Say NO To The Oppression Of The Un-Godly

3 - In either case the Socialist Canadian National and Provincial {State} Governments could NOT produce enough Jobs for Them to Work and be Independent : So they were Forced to Accept the small Social Welfare Payments as was their due.
* God Bless Them All - Amen ~ RHF
- RHF will now accuse me of preaching hate against
- persons of faith.

Mike [M II] - Your Own Words Accuse You :
Of What You Say and Are !

- He must be Mormon.
- mike

Mike [M II] - 'No' : I Do Respect Mormons and I Do Respect Their "Right" To Their Faith [.]

Mike [M II] -if- You were simply an Atheist : Then I Too Could Respect Your "Right" To Your Un-Faith.

Against Religions, Believers and Persons-of-Faith.

In 1919, George Herbert Walker had organized W.A. Harriman & Co which merged with the British Brown Brothers in 1931. In 1924, Averell Harriman (Skull & Bones, 1913) and Fritz Thyssen, the German industrialist who began funding Hitler in 1923, set up the Union Banking Corp in New York to handle funds supplied to it through Thyssen's Dutch bank for American investment. Prescott Bush, who had been an officer of the W.A. Harriman bank since 1926, was a director of the Union Banking Corp from 1934 through 1943. According to government documents, "all of the shares of the Union Banking Corp., were held for the benefit of members of the Thyssen family."

Treasury officials urged that an investigation be started with the French subsidiaries of several American banks ï¿½ that is, Chase, Morgan, National City, Guaranty, Bankers Trust, and American Express. Although Chase and Morgan were the only two banks to maintain French offices throughout the Nazi occupation, in September 1944 all the major New York banks were pressing the U.S. Government for permission to re-open pre-war branches. Subsequent Treasury investigation produced documentary evidence of collaboration between both Chase Bank and J.P. Morgan with the Nazis in World War II. The recommendation for a full investigation is cited in full as follows:

Morgan banking house under J.P. Morgan, and Rockefeller Chase Bank, and a little part also by Warburg Manhatten Bank, are controlling the following "US" companies:

-- General Motors
-- Ford
-- General Electric (medicine technique, engines for air planes, industrial plant manufacturing, financing)
-- DuPont (plastics, explosives, electronics, food)
-- a "hand full of US enterprises who were connected closely with development of Nazi Germany" (Antony Sutton, probably: Wall Street and the Rise of Hitler. 76 Press, Seal Beach 1966)

However, German industry was itself partly financed by British and American bankers. Much of the capital for the expansion of I.G. Farben came from Wall Street, primarily Rockefeller's National City Bank; Dillon Read & Company, also a Rockefeller firm; Morgan's Equitable Trust Company; Harris Forbes & Company; and even the predominantly Jewish firm of Kuhn Loeb & Company. In 1928, Henry Ford merged his German assets with those of I.G. Farben.(4) 40% of Ford Motor A.G. of Germany was transferred to I.G. Farben and Edsel Ford joined the board of American I.G.. A decade later, in August 1938, Henry Ford received the Grand Cross of the German Eagle, a Nazi decoration for distinguished foreigners.(5) During the Allied bombing raids over Germany, the factories and offices of I.G. Farben were spared on instructions from the U.S. War Department.

Remember Wild Kingdom? They used to scare whole herds of animals with an airplane just to get good camera shots. Countless dead animals.

Then there were all those "Where did that little lamb come from? The panther will surely eat it.." scenarios . Phoney garbage. Mutual of Omaha and Perkins should have been tried in court for animal abuse. Pricks.

Liberty Net: December 11, 2010

by Kevin Strom, WB4AIO

THE LIBERTY NET must have hit a nerve where it really counts, because there were some attempts to jam it off the air this week. But those attempts were quite feeble, and even stations running 100 Watts to very modest antennas were able to communicate and add their comments to amateur radioï¿½s longest-running discussion net.

Here are some of the topics touched on this time:

ï¿½ Weï¿½ve all heard about the Wikileaks release of US diplomatic cables that show the criminality of the regime in Washington and the atrocities of its Middle Eastern wars. But, if you accept the ï¿½need for secrecyï¿½ argument, why was the regime so incompetent that its operatives failed to use the simple and inexpensive encryption programs that are widely available today? (9 minutes)

ï¿½ The Richard Nixon Library has just released 265 hours of previously-secret Presidential tapes, which give fascinating insights into Nixonï¿½s awareness of racial and ethnic differences ï¿½ and of the Jewish/Zionist power structure, to which he had to kowtow while privately deploring. (23 minutes)

ï¿½ Why were a Liberty Net participantï¿½s notebooks and papers confiscated in Poland, only to be returned via diplomatic pouch in Prague? (35 minutes)

ï¿½ If there had been a Wikileaks in 1941, could Rooseveltï¿½s plans to get America into World War 2 have been foiled? Could Wikileaks have prevented the North Korean oil-for-nukes deal that stole billions from the American people? Could the Mossad and Neocon skulduggery that allowed 9/11 to happen have been stopped, and our disastrous Middle East wars prevented? (42 minutes)

ï¿½ We hear a lot of talk about debt ï¿½ British debt, American debt, Greek debt, and on and on ï¿½ but the real truth is that the banksters created all that money out of nothing; so none of those countries owe the banks a single dime. All such debt should be repudiated. (1 hour 44 minutes)

ï¿½ Is the Wikileaks affair the "Cyber-9/11" that the operatives of the regime in Washington are looking for, so they can institute the controls they have long wanted to exercise over the Internet? (1 hour 48 minutes)

ï¿½ In Switzerland (where youï¿½d least expect it), a private bank recently had to be sued by a customer in order for him to get the gold he had stored in his safety deposit box. It turns out the gold had been ï¿½loanedï¿½ by the bank without authorization, in a process very similar to what banks routinely do with everyoneï¿½s checking funds. The worst thing about safety deposit boxes, though, is that they are not secure from the ultimate thieves ï¿½ the criminals who call themselves ï¿½lawmakers.ï¿½ (2 hours 24 minutes)

ï¿½ In New York City, they have not only instituted cameras to ï¿½catchï¿½ and fine people who choose not to slam on their brakes when a traffic light turns yellow, but they have shortened the yellow light duration to make fines ï¿½ and accidents ï¿½ more likely. Then they have the gall to enact a ï¿½crash taxiï¿½ on everyone who has an accident, many of which they have made inevitable. (3 hours 4 minutes)

ï¿½ In Detroit, which has become, genetically, a Third World city, certain areas are so out of control that the government is withdrawing police and fire protection from them, with utilities soon to follow. (3 hours 17 minutes)

Thanks to Marty, N2IRJ, youï¿½re able to listen to the Liberty Net right now on your computer ï¿½ or download the file and listen on your portable mp3 player. And N2SAG operates a live feed and chat during Net times that lets you make an end run around jammers and a fickle ionosphere.

Join in or listen to the most exciting net on the amateur bands every Saturday night starting at 10PM Eastern Time. Recently the net has been meeting above 3960 kHz SSB to avoid DRM interference, but the frequency is flexible.

Our thanks go to W1WCR for his hard work and courage in keeping this important part of the amateur radio service on the air since 1974!

Hey Folks,
I'm Garrett. I'm new here, so I think it'd be appropriate to say hello.
I'm relatively new to the hobby, I recently bought my first shortwave receiver, a Sony ICF-SW7600GR. I'm living in Michigan currently, and I'm a Junior in High School.

So here's my questions:
I've been using my receiver with the included whip antenna and the included portable wire antenna. I've been having trouble picking up anything at all, even the more powerful stations. Does anyone have any insight? Should I get an antenna? If so, what kind?

Second,
Has anyone been able to pick up Voice of Korea in the midwest? Where could I find a current schedule online?

Thanks!
-Garrett

A 100+ ft antenna, approx 30+ feet in the air will, most likely, provide you with what you really want to hear. If you are able to expand on the length and/or height, don't be afraid to do so ...

Garrett:

These days, there is so much interference from computers, switching power supplies, et cetera, that any indoor antenna is going to compel you to suffer from severe noise on the shortwave bands.

I'd echo what John said, and emphasize that getting the antenna as high and as far from electronics and other noise sources as possible is advisable. Make sure your feedline is shielded coaxial cable so _it_ doesn't act as an antenna when it enters your house or apartment.

The exact length isn't as important (though it does affect the frequency response and pattern) as getting it out and in the clear.

Here's an article on constructing a simple dipole antenna.

http://www.angelfire.com/mb/amandx/dipole.html

The coaxial feed can be any length. Two trees could hold it up (or one tree if you make it an inverted V shape and support it in the middle).

Even though the dipole works best at its resonant frequency, for SWL use you'll find it does quite well from 50% to ten times that frequency.

Cable TV coax (RG-59 or RG-6) will work fine for the feedline and is cheap, and any fairly rugged wire (like #14 house wire available at hardware stores) will work for the antenna itself.

Welcome to shortwave and best of luck,

hello, i am new to shortwave listening, i just got a kaito 1103, mainly to receive weather fax while out on my boat in California, but I am in utah now messing about with it, and I am wondering if 1)I just need more practice tuning, or 2)are there just no signals here I can hear, 3) or is my radio faulty? and how do I know which? I cannot seem to pull in any signal I can recognize as a broadcast, with the exception of the FMs and MF AM stations local to my home here. (1160).

I have strung the wire antenna about head high across several large windows inside my house, which is a normal 1 story brick bungalow. (no big steel beams or massive lead walls...). I found a string of posts on this forum from 2006 with a fellow named Matt who described exactly what I am going through and there were several suggestions to him of how to very carefully try to tune in, and I have been trying that, at all hours of the day and night, aware that many signals seem to propogate better at dusk, dawn, and night.

is there any way to test whether my radio is faulty, or is it just me?

thanks and happy holidays
Kyle

Precisely. And a portable, like his, is particularly susceptible to overload.

30 feet of antenna, on a portable is more than enough to get his where he needs to go.

Experimentation, and refinement from there, as he gets his feet wet in the hobby.

True. A normal-sized outdoor antenna far from noise would still be best, I think, but a preselector and adjustable attenuator might be necessary to avoid overload on some portables.

With every good wish,

The antenna on a good portable is an active. It must be shorter than 1/4 wave at the highest frequency of interest to work at its optimum.

The EXT jack on a 7600 should be able to handle a proper wire antenna <10m or so.

Ya ain't gonna receive Weather Fax on that little radio. Who ever sold it to you and told you that you can, told you one big lie.
Hope you didn't pay too much, it's an older model now with an simulated analog display that eats batteries. The Sony ICF-7700 had the same dumb screen ... not battery friendly. "The Kaito" with a lousy volume up/down procedure. Unless you are at the bottom of the Grand Canyon, you should be able to pick up quite a bit more than you are getting. It is a sensitive radio. Try it outside away from any electrical interference if possible these days.
I believe you may just have a FAULTY radio.

Neither and both. The recession is a product of the global economy and tax cuts or deficits or debt are but a small piece. Really, it's the dismantling of the middle class and the traditional US economic structure that began under Reagan and his trickle-down that's to blame. This has been a long time a'coming. We don't make stuff here anymore. That's the root of the problem.

I said no such thing.

I really don't care to have my taxes cut if it means my neighbors can't work. What's a tax cut to them? i want jobs, and a middle class tax cut doesn't create jobs. Nor does a tax cut for billionaires.

That is why attenuators/narrow-filters are used. It is a simple law of physics, long antennas WILL receive signals short ones WILL NOT.

No one is saying that you cannot refuse to avail yourself of better reception ... some of us just find that unacceptable ...

Physics is certain on this point. An antenna with a larger capture area will always capture a stronger signal ... arguing that is pointless.

Well, hard to believe that you are familiar with front end overload as you say; you had at least two posts touting a long antenna, which would overload the particular radio the OP was asking about.

Bzzzzzttt! Wrong again!

Yes, I am familiar with narrow filters and attenuators -- BUT...this was totally NON-applicable to the receiver the OP was addressing.

Furthermore, once the front end has reached overload, all the downstream narrow filters in the world won't do any good.

And, yes, I do own a lot of radio stuff, from a 1912 loose coupler crystal set to vacuum tube ham transmitters and receivers to the latest solid state ham transceivers to vintage SWL/ham receivers. Heck, some even have 500 and 250 Hz filters that I use for RTTY and CW contesting.

All but the most blatant newbies should be able to deal with a "too good an antenna."

Because of disinformation and "wives tales", I suspect there are many with a tiny 30 ft. antenna who think they are realized "good reception" and feeling quite capable of advising others.

It is simply time to fix this ...

It is simply physics. A long antenna will ALWAYS receive better and more signals than a small one, even an amplified small one!

If you are happy with a small antenna, fine. It is only necessary for all to know how to get the best and/or more signals -- the choice is theirs ...

You STILL don't get it. It is NOT an issue of "too good an antenna"; it IS about too poor of a receiver front end.

Note: the OP's receiver in question is a fine receiver, BUT THE FRONT END IS NOT DESIGNED FOR A VERY LONG ANTENNA.

But nobody is arguing that.

NOT "pointless"; rather it is exactly the point.

Field strength is measured in volts per meter or micro volts per meter (of antenna length).

Nobody is denying the point that you are locked in on, namely that a longer antenna will give a stronger signal. This is indeed true...but it is also THE PROBLEM (with the receiver specified by the OP).

The stronger signal from the longer antenna will overload the front end of the receiver in question. THAT is the problem. And no, a down stream (IF filter) is not the answer. Due to the front end overload, the signal reaching the IF filter will -already- be damaged.

To anticipate your next response -- use of an attenuator -- will indeed alleviate the problem. But just think for a minute: What is the point of building a longer antenna to get a stronger signal that you are just going to attenuate anyway.

Best regards and happy holidays,
Joe

OK Bob...please explain why I would want to go to the trouble of building a longer antenna to get a stronger signal...and then attenuate that signal before it gets to the receiver. Seems it would be easier and cheaper to build a shorter (proper antenna for the rcvr in question) in the first place.

All I get is that you missed the importance of attenuators (heck, a couple of variable resistors will do.)

Indeed, most decent radios already have an RF Gain control on them ...
this will be quite helpful.

Why you are making a non-problem into a problem and arguing for small antennas is simply perplexing! To say the least!

And, for MW, a 300+ ft antenna is really needed for good DX ...

The OP wasn't asking about most receivers. The answer given by me and others for HIS receiver and HIS specific question is correct.

Please don't be too perplexed. I am not arguing in general for small antennas. I AM saying a large antenna is not the correct antenna for the OP's specific receiver in question. Period. What don't you understand about that?

> And, for MW, a 300+ ft antenna is really needed for good DX ...

Again you are addressing the -general- case. For the -specific- receiver the OP actually asked about, a 300 foot antenna would be a disaster.

Yes, you are right, it will pick up signals a smaller antenna will not.
On this we agree.

The "difficult concept" that you keep overlooking is that FOR THE RECEIVER THE OP ASKED ABOUT, the front end of said receiver, is not designed for a very long antenna.

If you have a communications receiver with good front end selectivity, the longer antenna will indeed be better. However, that was not the type of receiver the OP was asking about.

To summarize, in the general case, you are correct that a longer antenna is better; in the specific case that the OP actually asked about, longer is NOT better. You seem to keep addressing the general case while I and others are actually addressing the OP's specific case.

No. You don't know how to use a long antenna with such a receiver, that is the only problem. And, it sounds like you believe no one else is capable and has knowledge of how to make it work just fine. And, this all appears to place you in a position where you are either unwilling or unable to get the skills and knowledge.

A long antenna is not ONLY for some receivers, it is for all receivers ... indeed, a 1/4 wave MW antenna is over 300 FT. That is simply balderdash you would expect from someone who has never used a decent receiver and antenna combination!

1st - The External Antenna Input of most 'portable'

2nd - This Input is most often

So using a Random {Long} Wire Antenna that is closer to 300~500 Ohms Impedance

Radio Havana's DX'ers Unlimited with Arnie Coro is on at 10 minutes past the hour tonight. Don't know if this is permanent or just for today.

A) Egyptians used them millennia ago. B) Sumerians had some very advanced electrical gadgets and 'flying chariots' . C) Then the Chinese acquired some of them and started launching rockets into space. India too, not as widely known. D) Moses had a CB radio to communicate with G-d while in the Desert. E) Greeks had portable mechanical computers. E) Romans concentrated on warfare and weaponry, mostly. Sports was their second passion . Electric things wasn't their prime interest,nor was aviation.

You would expect most to be aware of such things. A balun/unun is actually a very necessary part of any antenna system ...

But, with a high and long antenna system, so is an attenuator--in most situations. Most are going to have problems with strong signals from closer stations, especially in MW/LW. So, for most, some type of narrow tunable filter(s) are also going to be necessary.

In my many years of radio, it never surprises me to find those using bed springs, balcony railings, TV masts, house wiring, etc. as antennas ... what doesn't surprise me is their poor reception ...

With cheaper radios and portable, a band stop filter for MW is really an absolute necessity when listening to SW ... still, I bet you can find any number of people here who get along and suffer without them ... plans should be available on the net, for anyone wishing to homebrew.

JS

A portable will have a hard time dealing with a 300' wire. Unless one

Until I moved to the city, I had a 150 FT antenna 40 FT high, in the foothills of the Sierra Nevada Mountains ... that was a decent antenna system ... it ended up being hooked up and used with every radio I owned, during those years ... it made a Radio Shack DX-393, portable, really come alive and have "decent ears."

And, chance are, if I could find a listing in a shortwave guide, my ICOM would grab it!

JS - Actually That Is Not True :

The Signals in the Aether Exist [.]
{In Their Own Relative Strength 'Potential'}

The smaller antenna will pick-up all the signals that the Larger Antenna -but- at a smaller signal level {potential} due to it's smaller physical size and properties.
{Smaller Capture Area = Less Signal 'Potential' Gathering}

The Larger Antenna will also pick-up all the Signals of the smaller antenna -but- at a Greater Signal Level {Potential} due to it's Larger Physical Size and Properties.
{Larger Capture Area = More Signal 'Potential' Gathering}

The Relative 'Local' Noise Level may prevent small {weak} signals from being heard.

The Receiver's Noise Floor and Amplification Factor may prevent small {weak} signals from being heard.

never-the-less the 'weak signals' e-x-i-s-t most often other factors prevent you from hearing them - iane ~ RHF

JfK,

Actually the Sony ICF-SW7600GR 'portable' AM/FM Shortwave Radio is just fine as is.

It is simply 'optimized' to use the Whip Antenna
or a small 23 Foot Reel-Up Antenna that 90+%
of the 'portable AM/FM Shortwave Radio 'users' will be using to listen to their radios.

Absolutely. Indeed, I'd even speculate that if a mosquito farts in Australia, it causes a "disturbance" in America! And, could be detected--with a sufficiently sensitive detector ...

However, as stated, a longer and/or higher antenna will provide stronger and more signals.

Point being, a small antenna can never be made to function as well as a larger antenna. And that simply translates into the longer and higher the better ... up to a point. Very long antennas (in relation to wavelength become directional in the direction the wire travels.)

A complete SW setup (or even a good MW DX station) with have a decent antenna, a balun/unun and matchbox/tuner and fed with a suitable feeder (coax is best when the feeder goes though areas susceptible to noise,) a filter(s) able to provide rejection of unwanted signals, an attenuator, etc.

A good antenna with a mediocre receiver will beat a better receiver with a poor antenna every time ... And, of course, you must provide the receiver with a usable signal before you get anywhere at all ... so much for "Radio 101."

JS

Actually, no. Instead, it is like this, a crystal radio with an elaborate antenna can receive EVERY signal the most expensive radio (or Ferrari, for that matter) can ... once you have the signal you can do anything you wish with it ... the KEY being, you need the signal!

If it has a the Local/DX switch, you can use this as a "Decent Antenna Detector." When you never have to take the switch off of local, you will know you have a decent antenna ... ROFLOL

And, I forgot to mention lightening protection, and take the antenna

JS,

Each functions equally 'as well' based on their relative size.

Practically speaking as the Antenna Size/Length Increases the "Usability" of the Signals 'developed' by it may improve to a point -but- beyond that the added {more more more} Size/Length of the Antenna may then start to cause other problems that off-set any increase in Size/Length.

Optimum Performance = Optimal Size/Length

practically speaking 'results matter' ~ RHF

You are speaking of "The law of diminishing returns," isn't everyone aware that, that universal law applies universally--to everything. However, you do bring up a most necessary concept, at some point you just have to take it for granted that everyone is aware of the things which should have been covered in school ...

But, for ballpark figures, a 120 FT. antenna is generally accepted as good for average SW listening. If your target is low power pirate stations, longer is better; You should also have two antennas, one in an east/west receiving configuration and one in a north/south configuration--signals from Russia/China are prone to leaping the pole.

If your liking is for cross country DX of MW stations, ~330+ FT. is a good length. If you are a lowfer, miles is not too long ...

On the longer, well insulated longwire antennas, you will notice that the antenna will constantly maintain some sort of voltage on the wire, if not connected, you can measure this voltage with a VTVM.

When Art Bell was in Pahrump, NV, he would frequently be able to measure 100+ volts on his extremely long loop antenna (strung around his property on the top of telephone poles.) A suitable matching transformer, balun/unun can be used which will bring the antenna to ground potential ... or a couple of diodes with their polarities reversed from one another connected to the antenna and ground (limits this voltage to ~.7 volts), or, with a capacitor of proper value/voltage-rating the static (dc) charge can be isolated from the receiver.

Back in the 1960's, when I first got interested in radio, all this was pretty much common knowledge and picked up from magazines/hobby-publications, boy scouts, hams, others in the hobby, radio clubs, library books on the subject, etc. -- I just thought it would still be pretty much the same today--I am suspecting times have changed.

Of course, my first radio was a homemade crystal radio ... and a long, long antenna ... indeed, my antennas were only limited by space, wire on hand, and the height I was willing to climb in trees.

JS

I tend to agree with you here. I have one of the early 7600 portables and I find it to be excellent without anything more than the built in whip and the supplied longwire antenna. The Sony even outperformed one of my desktop rigs which was equipped with external longwire antenna and tuner.
Note however that I use the Sony 7600 purely as a portable for when I'm traveling and it is excellent in that usage. The audio quality is only fair when using the built in speaker but it is improved by using headphones. I use my desktop radios for the bulk of my DX work.

Among others. These frequencies give the best reception in the

JS,

Lets see an old Hallicrafters SX-100 'Tube' Receiver http://www.dxing.com/rx/sx100.htm might require 150 Foot Random {Long} Wire Antenna with a Matching Transformer, Ground and Coax Cable feed-in-line : "To-Hear" that Target Weak Signal.
* Twice the Antenna & Half the Receiver *

While a modern Drake R8B 'Solid State' Receiver might http://www.dxing.com/rx/r8b.htm only require 75 Foot Random {Long} Wire Antenna with a Matching Transformer, Ground and Coax Cable feed-in-line : "To-Hear" that same Target Weak Signal.
* Half the Antenna & Twice the Receiver *

Matching the Antenna to the Radio : It Works !

Krypsis,

Exactly the Sony ICF-SW7600GR 'portable' AM/FM Shortwave Radio is just fine as is.

It is simply 'optimized' to use the Whip Antenna
or a small 23 Foot Reel-Up Antenna that 90+%
of the 'portable AM/FM Shortwave Radio 'users' will be using to listen to their radios regularly.

of Sackville, NB and gives very good reception here in Southeast Michigan. There is also Korean language scheduled from 9:00-10:00EST (1400UTC) on the same frequency. It is coming in very strong as I write this (1403 UTC). Good luck and good DX'ing.

Generally, a modest tube receiver can handle a wider dynamic range than a comparable sand box. Front end gain has always been relatively effortless for tubes. It requires rather exotic solid state methods.

All that being opined, a short wire (3m) will light up both sets nicely.

Hi Bob and thanks for the ideas. I should have been more plain, I do hear copious and variable white noises that changes pitch and tone as I tune. I can also watch the signal indicator rise and fall as I go through the bands. and I forgot to mention that I did hear a very faint and brief time stamp message on 15000, only once though, I can't seem to get it to come in again.

radio outside, but I will keep trying.

Until you find a way to break the laws of physics and energy conservation, a small antenna will NEVER receive as well as a larger one. The higher the better ...

Even rewriting the facts will not change any of this ... or, even attempting to use language to obfuscate this will be unsuccessful.

Most, including myself, wish a small antenna would perform as well as a large one. I now live in the city and my antennas are reduced in size. They do not perform as well as larger ones, I simply have no choice, otherwise, I would string up a 150 footer and get more stations that is possible now ... to anyone who has ever tested a short antenna against a longer one, there is no debate on if the laws of physics can be broken, or not ... they simply can't.

JS

Well said. I think it is obvious, you "shoot" for the best case scenario, in the end, if you are limited by space, material, cost, or the rules and regulations of the area you live in, you live with it.

As I have said, some will want the strongest and clearest signals they can obtain ... some will toss a length of wire out the window and accept the results. It is all just a personal choice ...

But, in the end, the longer antenna will always out perform the shorter
... it is only important that everyone knows what is possible and be allowed to choose what they desire ... your advise is very sound in that.

JS

Actually, between your words, I hear, "No one needs to receive better than me. If it is good enough for me, it is good enough for you."

I have always wondered why some here call others "liars" on the type, time and quality they receive stations at ... now I can guess the reason(s) why this is happening ... why anyone with a 30 FT antenna even thinks he/she is going to come close to receiving the quality or numbers of stations a 120 FT will receive simply boggles my mind! I have to tell you, such thinking sounds insane to me ... I leave it to others to form their own opinions ...

Dream on ...

Well, I would agree. They only need to compare a 30 FT antenna against a 120 FT antenna and they will immediately know which they want.

Indeed, this was the point from the beginning! Glad you concur!

Just give the SW listener a choice and let him/her decide!

Simply because an attenuator, if there is overload, can be adjusted to _just enough_ attenuation to prevent distortion and spurs. This may still leave you with a much better signal to noise ratio than a poor antenna.

A preselector / tuner can do the same thing, with the additional benefit that off-frequency and out of band signals (which are often the ones causing the overload, if there is any) can be greatly attenuated without reducing the desired signal at all.

There are some facts that both sides of this argument are missing.

1. "Shorter" does not always mean less signal strength. If I am trying to receive a weak signal on 10 meters, an unmatched 300-foot Marconi is probably going to deliver a much _weaker_ signal than a matched, resonant ground plane, a few feet high, specifically designed for 10 meters.

2. Antenna patterns vary widely by frequency, and the patterns of unterminated antennas generally get more and more complex as the length of the antenna in wavelengths gets larger than 1. Moving a longwire antenna by as much as a few degrees can easily move the desired signal from a peak to a null of more than 20 dB. So the longer antenna could, on any given signal, deliver vastly less _or_ more signal than a smaller dipole, depending on its orientation.

And I haven't even addressed the issue of impedance matching, which has a huge effect on signal level, yet is seldom even addressed in SWL circles.

Untuned random wires of any length, short or long (and that includes dipoles used on other than their resonant frequencies), are strictly a gamble when it comes to SWL results, unless you model them before trying. But it's a fun gamble. I encourage the original poster to try.

When traveling, and listening from a cruise ship, hotel room, beach, etc., I sometimes use an active antenna.

At home, I never use one. Any amplified antenna also introduces a noise figure in addition to atmospheric and manmade noise. Examining the spec sheet on the devices used in the active antennas construction will tell you the amount of noise you are introducing into the antenna system.

So, of course, at home, I use the best/highest/length possible.

It is relatively easy to find that an active antenna is NOT even in the same league as a 120 FT antenna mounted 30 FT or more in the air. Simple tune a weak station on the 120 FT antenna and then disconnect and find that you can't even receive the same signal of the active antenna (probably is there, but below the noise floor and unusable.) Again, just a simple law of physics ... you can read any book on the subject and find it plainly stated ... however, like everyone else, I first had to find it out for myself, before I accepted it ... I'd just love to toss 30 FT of wire out a second story window and get every station on the other side of globe ... wouldn't we all?

You can probably best answer that, yourself. Read your own words ... I don't see you stating me, specifically. Now read my words, again, I don't see myself claiming you called ME a liar ...

If you are having difficulty with even that, no wonder antennas are much more difficult for you ...

Well, I can certainly understand where they are coming from. When getting started in radio, I battled with small antennas from the get-go. First off, I was 15 years old. My mother didn't want me climbing great heights or stinging unsightly wires about the property. Luckily, I interested my father in the hobby ... soon real antennas started happening!

One advantage I had back then, which may be lacking today, is that there were a LOT of people interested in SW and Amateur Radio, even CB. In visiting others stations and listening posts, it became quite apparent, those with the longer higher antennas were receiving signals I was totally missing ... there is much truth in the phrase, "Seeing is believing."

Capture area is a major factor, and I did mention it earlier in a post a few dozen back, or so ... combined with sufficient antenna, matchboxes, baluns, filters/notch-filters, tuners, etc. one can end up with very impressive results!

But, the guy who just wants to pull out a whip on a portable and catch what he can is just as valid ... if it is something you want to hear and the signal is good, it is all good. Just never hurts to know what is possible, if you ever want to explore in that direction ...

Actually, it's the emerging economies of India and China that are causing it. It costs a lot less, and I mean a lot less, to produce goods over there. Unions are in large part that are responsible for the loss of jobs in this country. Nice to see you admit tax cuts aren't really the cause, though.

Talk about fear mongering. If that much is true, why did the incompetent one sign the latest tax bill? Pick a side already.

i.e. Winners and losers. And, your middle class got an extension of current rates. That's a great deal for them since they pay little to nothing in fed income taxes anyway. And, they're getting a break on SS taxes to boot. Geez, will you not be happy until they pay nothing?

> > They got em! What's the problem?

Yeah….and? Doesn't it stand to reason that tax cuts would go to someone that actually pays taxes? Even though these aren't cuts, but rather an extension of decade old rates.

I didn't launch anything. And, it's not my party. I'll ask this. Why did your party sit back and go along with the gop? I'll tell you why. They went right along with it because they knew, as you are demonstrating here and now for all to see, people would be dumb enough to believe that it was just the gop and the gop only. Your party knew you as a loyal follower were, and are, that stupid.

Nice logic. I'll refute that when you refute whether you've stopped beating your grandkids yet.

I'm pretty confused now. I have a small-ish budget 20-50 to spend on an Toker Dave is currently at the Top of The List, followed by 'John Smith' and Michael W. Bryant. MWB might have been nearer the top but then, almost out of nowhere, 'John Smith' started his antenna rant, obviously clueless as to the inherent troubles that portables have with large antennas.

I'm hoping to present the Award after I -hopefully- hear the full strike of Big Ben on -shortwave- at 0000 on 1 January 2011.

And, for all you clown 'tards out there, don't tell me how I can hear it on any other outlet other than shortwave, cause I just ain't interested in your wet dreams via technology, got it, Rickmers?

I am sorry if you read my words, like tea leaves, and came to that conclusion. However, I am NOT one to mince words, if I have something to say, I will say it outright and the consequences be damned!

I am mostly in agreement with you. I use a portable with a whip frequently, myself ... and the old DX-392 beside my bed simply uses a small grundig loop ... gets the talk radio stations clear, which I find favor with ...

But, I didn't take anything you have said to invalidate anyone at all. I was simply giving the span and breadth of the range of listeners out there and noting that the hardware they would need would be vastly differing ... some will even buy a radio, use it for a week and let it live in a closet for years.

Build one, this page has some elementary instructions ...

http://www.dwave.net/~twomules/antenna.html

You don't have to do everything at once. A 30-70 ft antenna will get you started receiving enough signals. When you are comfortable and enjoying the fact you can make your own, expand and improve ... at least, that is how I did it.

Actually, that is not a bad starting point. Will allow a newbie to get the feel, have some success and decide if it is a hobby he would like to pursue and get deeper into!

But, rather pricey for a few feet of wire ...

The "warming" refers to total global heat load (input vs output).
Increased heat load causes more water vapor which dumps more rain and snow, and often in the wrong places. The warming has also radically altered wind currents in the Arctic region, causing cold air to plunge further south than it used to. Mock at your own risk.

Old phone line? Old twin lead? Old coax? Old extension cord you can strip the wiring out of? Does the local hard ware store sell cheap aluminum or copper coated steel electric fence wire? Is there a local demolition company, to you, where you can buy some old house wiring which has been ripped out? Etc., etc.

You can make cheap insulators out of PVC pipe, just cut into a couple 6 inch sections, drill a hole though the ends and use as insulators for you antenna ...

Yep, I am with you, cheap is good! :-)

Try a small mono jack (don't force it) to connect with the socket labeled AM EXT ANT . It is next to the telescoping antenna. That is the input,as far as I know.

And, noise pickup is acceptable? You have underground power?

The were supposed to drop the powerlines in my neighborhood underground, then the economic collapse hit ... there is a transformer, somewhere around here, which causes noise, especially when raining. Power company came out and I pointed out the transformer to them. They said they would have it fixed ... but then, that also was before the economic collapse worsened/lengthened ... I am going to have the wife call 'em and complain, again ... and, probably again ...

Actually, and overall, I'd say Alex has it about 80% correct!

That's it.

I frequently listen to talk radio and had a large loop beside the bed, against the wall.

Wife came home with that little thing and I laughed at it.

However, I hooked it up to show her it would not be sufficient -- and had to eat my words ... :-(It sets in a window and is fed from the jack provided on the loop ... works better than the mutual coupling method.

The larger, homemade loop beats it, but I don't do real DX beside the bed, so it is just fine. Allows me to get KGO in san fransicko with VERY minimal fading (difficult without a loop from my location and KGO's antenna orientation towards their desired audience.)

I was heasring them on. ARGH.) I will keep trying.

It is legal. However, there is an unwritten ham radio rule that you do not talk politics or religion over the air. No doubt this is especially true for Cuban hams. :-)

I've worked numerous Cubans on CW, RTTY and even heard Eduardo, CO8LY, as we were both trying to contact the MIR space station on packet radio. (Yes, I got through to MIR and have the QSL to prove it. Eduardo did not get them on that pass.)

End fed antennas impedance vary wildly with length. A true long wire (over a wavelength) picks up exactly as much + wave as it does - wave, and therefore the net gain is zero except along a very narrow axis extending off both ends (unterminated) or the far end only (terminated).
This is the only condition I know of where the antenna itself provides a crude kind of space diversity.

I'm telling you the patriarch of the Green clan of old Virginia (which included W. Virginia and Kentucky at one time) was Boling Green. The name turns up often in historical papers.

You'd be amazed. On many antennas + and - are pretty arbitrarily assigned. I can reverse my tuner and make my radials plus and my vertical wire minus, and the antenna gets out almost as well. (None of the antenna is at RF ground-the whole mess floats on the roof).

Cebek says all antennas are dipoles (excepting true long wires I presume).

Antennas are a great subject.

5544. Why FCC should reign in Fox News

It is heartening that the Times called foul on a journalistic infraction by Fox and that the writer at least recognizes that Fox has a political agenda, but it is not encouraging that the Times editorialists continue to view Fox as a club member in good standing, albeit one that plays by its own rules more often than not.

Journalists should be the last cohort to be fooled by a political operation that disguises itself as a news outlet, and the journalism establishment ought to be leading the charge for rousting the impostors.

Who can stop Fox? Not ï¿½liberal bloggers,ï¿½ though we will do our best. And certainly not the government, which is rightly prevented from censoring Fox ï¿½ even a propaganda outlet has the right to free speech.

Itï¿½s up to the journalism establishment to put its own house in order. But, as the Times editorial shows, journalists at the loftiest perches of the profession have yet to recognize the peril Fox presents. Unless and until mainstream journalists ï¿½muster the outrageï¿½ to unmask Fox for what it is, once and for all, Fox will continue to pose an existential threat, both to the Fourth Estate, as Foxï¿½s financial success accelerates the death knell for objective journalism ï¿½ and to the body politic, which is beginning to weaken under the barrage of Foxï¿½s right-wing propaganda, which is now entering its 15th year.

Think about it. If instead of Fox, these polls had found that the Times, Time Magazine, ABC News or any other mainstream outlet was tricking out its reporting to further a political agenda, not only would heads roll inside the organization, the journalism establishment would be up in arms.

And yet, faced with evidence that Fox is undermining the entire profession by promulgating propaganda, the establishmentï¿½s collective reaction is a shrug. Whaddayagonnado.

It's gauche to assault him personally. You should point out that he's a major shareholder in an oil company and deserves a big home office.

- Republicans alway accuse others of doing
- what the republicans would do.
- If they accuse you of cheating
- it is because they cheat.
- If they accuse you of domestic spying,
- it's because they invented it.

Ah 'Special Dave' there is always the opposing view. . .

Liberal-Fascists Always Accuse 'Others of Doing What They Themselves 'The Democrat-Progressives' Do :
* If They Accuse You of Cheating :
It Is Because They Cheat -aka- The Loop-Hole.
* If They Accuse You of Domestic Spying : It's Because They Are 'Big Brother'.
* If They Accuse You of Lies and Half-Truths : It's Because They Invented 'Propaganda'.
* If They Accuse You of War Mongering and Profiteering : It's Because They Invented "The Just/Right/Good War".
All Done : In The Name Of The Greater Good !

While the cable/satellite news outlet receive per subscriber fees through the cable and satellite providers, there are still plenty of commercials. Apparently the advertisers have some way of guessimating how many pairs of eyes are watching each channel. If you disagree with a channel's politics or think their reports are unreliable DON'T WATCH IT. If enough of the viewers who are monitored by the rating's agencies agree with you the channel you despise so much will be forced to change their policies or shut down.

Also note that FCC authority over cable/satellite channel content is significantly narrower than the agency's authority over direct broadcaster to home antenna content.

I have no problem with their content. I have a big problem with them being able to characterize it as "news". They lie, which is completely legal with a few exceptions. I'd like a rule prohibiting them from labeling their "lies" as "news". That's all.

Why would you need to change the oil in your lawnmower? If you were a landscaper, sure, but most lawnmowers run maybe a thousand or two hours total before they get tossed. Any modern automotive oil should last that long.

Gore was already wealthy before he went into politics. His dad was a senator too.

That was written about Dutch Americans in New York, by a Scotsman in England, and the people bowling are an hallucination. Other than that, you give great example.

Boling Green moved from Kentucky to Ohio to Illinois around the War of 1812. I believe he served on a jury in Sangamon County. Look him up.

You are lucky to get 400 hundred hours out of a low end Briggs and Stratton....and thats with oil changes every 30 hours. The overhead valve engines get maybe 800 to 1200 hours. Those have an oil pump to take care of the valve gear. The Japanese engines are far better, you can almost double the lifespan figures.

The oil should be changed and the engine run for a while before you store the thing for the winter.

Me? I use a 12 ampere electric mower. No maintenance headaches. I AM starting to reconsider my purchase of a green extension cord, however.

I have problems with MSNBC, but they do not lie and they do not call themselves "news". They fastidiously maintain journalistic credibility and proved it recently by suspending Olberman and Scarborough for financial support of candidates. How many Fox "News" people have been punished for supporting one side over the other.

To compare the 2 is ludicrous. MSNBC are "truth to power" muckrakers in the great tradition of American journalism; Fox News is first and foremost the mouthpiece of corporate America (the power that needs to hear the truth) and defenders of old money.

Of course you have no problem with MSNBC, because it fits in with your political leanings. Both of the "pundit" networks have agendas, perhaps you will learn this some time.

Back around 1968 or so, I bought a new lawn mower at a Gibson's Discount store that used to be on Ellis Ave.I paid $44.00 plus Mississippi Rip Off! taxes for that lawn mower.It was in a cardboard box.I had to put the handle on that lawn mower.I put oil and gas in the Briggs & Stratton engine.I got over Thirty Years of service out of that Briggs & Stratton lawn mower engine.The gas tank finally went kaput on that Briggs & Stratton lawn mower engine, I put another gas tank on there.About six years ago some B HO Butt Kissers moved into that house next door to me, not the other house where my divorced wimmins used to live next door to me.
The fourth time I loaned that old lawn mower to that B HO Butt Kisser, he never brought it back to me.He said he loaned it to his sister in another part of town.I wound up going to the Walmart store to buy a new lawn mower, about $100.00 for that lawn mower.Of course it has a Briggs & Stratton engine.(if it doesn't have a Briggs & Stratton engine, I don't want it) I always change the oil every year, whether it needs it or not.

I have the Homelite cordless. It has a dumb charger, the only drawback.

Previously when I moved I'd buy a $50 lawnmower from the local ma and pa fixit shop, and leave it when I moved. I never had one seize, a few of them had some some blow-by. They all needed sharpening more than anything else (plus scooping the wet grass out in South Texas.)

Nice veer into the ditch, are you a pro stunt speaker or what? The topic is whether the Roger Ailes corporate propaganda channel should be allowed to call what it does "news". MSNBC doesn't call itself a news channel. They have news bulletins, opinions, and endless shows about prison and child molesters. They do not claim to be a traditional news operation. Fox News does make that claim, but have been proven to repeatedly intentionally distort the news, and to give equal weight to truth and fiction. This is not my opinion. It is fact.

Mels Hole!

That was classic Art Bell. His tongue-in-cheek handling of Mel, his supporters, and the validity of the holes existence was great. The subtle-ness of his use of humor in the handling of this "delicate subject", his stealthy irony, applied just at the right time ...

Any antenna (verticle being an exception) will always show some type of directivity. Usually, this can be used to the operators advantage. However, I do have two antennas. One orientated to get east/west stations is the one used mostly. However, the one in an north/south orientation is useful for signals popping the poles ...

I'm still using a Briggs powered lawnmower my father purchased new in 1964. I mowed every lawn in the neighborhood, at 1 hour each, for 5 years, when I lived in New Duchesne Hills, two neighbors' lawns at 1.5 hours each, in Hazelwood for 8, and my own, sometimes twice a week, since new.

It's still running, still starts on the second crank, every time.

Nowadays lawn mowers have those little priming bulbs on there, that squirts some gas into the carburetor, no more old fashioned chokes to contend with.But, those new fangled priming bulbs don't last too long.I doubt if they will last over thirty years.

Ara, that is the way it goes.I got over thirty years of service from that lawn mower,,,, and a naysayer says I did not.I live here, I Know I got over thirty years of service from that lawn mower!

Actually, that's not true. A carburetor takes at least one crank to begin to draw correctly.

I've put one set of bearings in it. And carburetor membranes.
Other than that, haven't needed any.

That was meant as a joke. I KNOW you meant 'crank' as a pull on the starting rope. I used the term as a shortening of 'crankshaft'. Not too many people would change that.

No, actually, I meant 'crank' as in crank. There is no starter rope on this model. You turn it over with a fold out crank handle on the top of the engine...where the traditional recoil starter would be.

As for changing out a crank...I've done it. Not on this model, obviously, but I did service lawnmowers for a number of years. The most common failure on Tecumseh engines I saw was spun bearings and cracked crankshafts.

One of my experiments a number of years ago, was on a Murray I picked up at a garage sale. It had a Tecumseh motor on it and it needed a tune up and a carb kit. Took about an hour and a half to rebuild the carb and I had it running. While doing the tune-up, I got the bright idea to improve performance by as much as I could get away with. Fitting new rings, balancing the crank/rod/piston assembly, shaving the head, hand lapping the valves, porting and polishing, and rejetting the carb, I got it to nearly double it's full run rpm's, but it required premium fuel.

On a smooth payment, it would dance around the output shaft by itself. And the output chute could drive a wind tunnel. It was the only lawn mower that needed a tail rotor.

I had to advance the timing by a bit to get it to run smoothly, and put a bigger squirrel cage fan on it to keep it cool. And I put a port fin on the exhaust header, but it started strong, and ran like a monster.

Until the casting let go.

I was picking aluminum out of the siding on the garage for months. Hot oil flew 50 feet in every direction. And I never did find the spark plug.

But, damn, for those two hours, it was something.

Never tried to punch up a Briggs, though.

Neat. I once thought of trying to make a hovercraft using a lawnmower as a base. Being a kid, I figured just bending the blade a bit more would be enough. It's just as well that I never tried it, I would have wound up missing toes. Or something.

After the first season of Fireball XL5, I tried to build a jetmobile using two riding lawnmower engines and counter-rotating ducted fans. I got it to lift, but it was too unstable to remain off the ground. I needed to build a counter rotating gyro, but never got the transmission down to a size that was small enough to fit inside the bodywork.

Bzzzttttt! Wrong!

Change oil before storage? Yes!

Run it for awhile before storage? NO!!!

This just adds combustion products and water that is going to lie in the oil all winter.

That reminds me of the song 'Fireball'. Come to think of it, there's

The goal is to get fresh oil into the bearings, and on to engine parts. Since the lubrication system is not pressurized, that is, there is no oil pump, but rather only an oil slinger, changing the oil, will only affect the parts that are immersed...that is the oil slinger fingers. Fresh oil will not reach the other parts of the engine, so the dirty oil film will remain on the machined parts all winter, creating opportunity for combustion.

So, while you're right, running does put crap into the fresh oil, there is no other way to coat the internals than by running the engine to temperature. Because there is no other way to get the slinger RPM's up sufficiently to sling the oil over the parts.

You simply can't do it by hand.

Interesting.
When he mentioned the new antenna I was on 6000, then switched to 6050 and found it much better.
My location is 40N 100W and listen often around 0300z to 0500z, but not daily. He's sounding fine on 6050 @ 0540z with 6000 barely audible.
He mentioned Western NA as the area where 6050 was intended, but I didn't catch it exactly.
Antenna is a horizontal rooftop wire about 30 feet long plugged into the aux antenna port of a 3 year old SW7600GR

yahoo! i was able to start getting several signals yesterday late morning. most were in the 13-15000Kz range, most were in spanish so I was never sure if they announced where they were located or not. I did pick up LWF.org on 13570. they are out of TN but I am sure they have repeaters everywhere including Utah.

I have been stringing my little wire antenna around the room across several big windows but yesterday I tried an experiment of winding it around a 6' PVC pipe and leaning it against the window and that seemed to give as good or better a signal. I plan to use this receiver on my boat so a small simple antenna is important to me, although I plan to use my mast to run it up at least 30 feet. I have searched these forums about antennas and see many huge heated discussions about the subject with no consensus. seems everyone has very strong opinion, and they all make what seem like valid points. So here we go again: Would I gain much by trying an active antenna, or is my little wire as much as this little radio can handle?

Study Confirms That Fox News Makes You Stupid
Yet another study has been released that proves that watching Fox News is detrimental to your intelligence. World Public Opinion, a project managed by the Program on International Policy Attitudes at the University of Maryland, conducted a survey of American voters that shows that Fox News viewers are significantly more misinformed than consumers of news from other sources. Whatï¿½s more, the study shows that greater exposure to Fox News increases misinformation.
So the more you watch, the less you know. Or to be precise, the more you think you know that is actually false. This study corroborates a previous PIPA study that focused on the Iraq war with similar results. And there was an NBC/Wall Street Journal poll that demonstrated the break with reality on the part of Fox viewers with regard to health care. The body of evidence that Fox News is nothing but a propaganda machine dedicated to lies is growing by the day. [Emphasis added]
In eight of the nine questions below, Fox News placed first in the percentage of those who were misinformed (they placed second in the question on TARP). Thatï¿½s a pretty high batting average for journalistic fraud. Here is a list of what Fox News viewers believe that just aint so:

* 91% believe that the stimulus legislation lost jobs.
* 72% believe that the health reform law will increase the deficit.
* 72% believe that the economy is getting worse.
* 60% believe that climate change is not occurring.
* 49% believe that income taxes have gone up.
* 63% believe that the stimulus legislation did not include any tax cuts.
* 56% believe that Obama initiated the GM/Chrysler bailout.
* 38% believe that most Republicans opposed TARP.
* 63% believe that Obama was not born in the US (or that it is unclear).

The conclusion is inescapable. Fox News is deliberately misinforming their viewers and they are doing it for a reason. Every issue above is one in which the Republican Party had a vested interest. They benefited from the ignorance that Fox News helped to proliferate. The results were apparent in the election last month as voters based their decisions on demonstrably false information fed to them by Fox News.

By the way, the rest of the media was not blameless. CNN and the broadcast network news operations fared only slightly better in many cases. Even MSNBC, which had the best record of accurately informing viewers, has a ways to go before they can brag about it.

It is amazing how anyone anywhere can grant credibility to any of this government/elitist controlled media ... investigative reporters have now been absent for a decade! Rare, but it does happen. More often, however, a political stance is voluntarily taken that parallels an agenda in order to prevent becoming irrelevant. From there, the agenda becomes powerful enough to, in a, more or less, veiled form, threaten a reporter's standing with his/her employer, or professional community. Given enough time, direct threats are possible, but rarely happen, because they are unnecessary.

What's not often acknowledged is, that power wouldn't exist if reporters, both as individuals, or as a class, and their editors/publishers hadn't ceded it to the agenda in the first place.

This is nothing new.

It takes serious brass to stand up in media and speak against Power. And when Power strikes back, careers end, lifestyles end. Or worse.

Few in media, today, have the brass to take such a hit willingly. Those that do have large money willing to back them up in a facedown.

The rest....they voluntarily cede their backbone to the agenda. And suddenly you realize you have media that are about anything but the truth. And that can never stand up for the people they were created to serve.

MFJ has a dynamite little amplified preselector that also makes a great front end for indoor active or amplified long wire.

If MFJ had been around when I grew up the crime rate in the '70s would

IIRC Weather FAX does not use 'Repeaters' :

The U.S. Coast Guard provided Weather FAX just uses the Shortwave [High Frequency]
http://www.monitoringtimes.com/html/mthffax.html

Note - Some local areas {SF Bay Area} used to use the un-used UHF TV Channels to Broadcast a TV Image of the Local Radar and Weather for the many Boaters who did not have SSB Radios for use to receive the Weather FAX. -is-this-still-being-done-?-

-may-be- Weather FAX is now 'available' At-Sea over the Internet via Dish ?

Linear {End-Fed} Dipole Boat Antenna :
The Simplest 'Up-the-Mast' Shortwave Antenna for a Boat and a 'portable' AM/FM Shortwave Radio is made using a 1/8" Mono-Jack that is Solder* to a length of Twin (2) Speaker Wire. {50~75 Feet Spool}

* Solder the Silver Colored Wire to the Tip {Antenna} and Copper Colored Wire to the Barrel {Ground}
-if- Both Wires are Copper Colored : Then one will usually have a White-Stripe for Barrel {Ground}

Place the Radio in it's intended 'location' on the Boat.

Plug the 1/8" Mono-Jack in to the Radio and then start un-spooling the Wire out a Window/Door/Hatch and up and over to the Mast or a Mast-Stay and up-it to the Top of the Mast or Stay.

Note - Measure the Mast or Mast-Stay and Trim {Cut} the Twin (2) Speaker Wire to this length + 3"~4".
Next divide the Length of the Mast or Mast-Stay by two (2) {Half 1/2}.
Trim {Cut} the Copper Colored / White-Stripe for Barrel {Ground} Wire 'Only' at this Half-Way-Point; and Remove it from the Far-End of the Silver {Non-Striped}Antenna Wire.
Finally form a Loop in the End of the Antenna Speaker
Wire so that you can Rig-it-to-the-Mast.

Tip : Use Plastic 'Outdoor' Wire Ties to Secure the Antenna Wire as needed.

A nice listen as well. I've tape 1 playing at the moment. School children were being evacuated from London, and they sang a little song before leaving Waterloo Station.

It's a shop where folks donate stuff, and the proceeds ostensibly go to buy Bibles for Mexico. There are two locations here, but I rarely go to the one on the northside of town.

Over the years I've found quite a few interesting items. At least one being my mint GE Superadio II that I got, as I recall, for around $6.00.

They sell everything from clothing to TV's. Kind of a catch as catch can inventory. If you're interested in it, rule #1 is to buy it then, cause you'll come back and it'll be gone. I beat rule #1 today, but that doesn't happen too often!

Study Confirms That Fox News Makes You Stupid
Yet another study has been released that proves that watching Fox News is detrimental to your intelligence. World Public Opinion, a project managed by the Program on International Policy Attitudes at the University of Maryland, conducted a survey of American voters that shows that Fox News viewers are significantly more misinformed than consumers of news from other sources. Whatï¿½s more, the study shows that greater exposure to Fox News increases misinformation.
So the more you watch, the less you know. Or to be precise, the more you think you know that is actually false. This study corroborates a previous PIPA study that focused on the Iraq war with similar results. And there was an NBC/Wall Street Journal poll that demonstrated the break with reality on the part of Fox viewers with regard to health care. The body of evidence that Fox News is nothing but a propaganda machine dedicated to lies is growing by the day. [Emphasis added]
In eight of the nine questions below, Fox News placed first in the percentage of those who were misinformed (they placed second in the question on TARP). Thatï¿½s a pretty high batting average for journalistic fraud. Here is a list of what Fox News viewers believe that just aint so:

* 91% believe that the stimulus legislation lost jobs.
* 72% believe that the health reform law will increase the deficit.
* 72% believe that the economy is getting worse.
* 60% believe that climate change is not occurring.
* 49% believe that income taxes have gone up.
* 63% believe that the stimulus legislation did not include any tax cuts.
* 56% believe that Obama initiated the GM/Chrysler bailout.
* 38% believe that most Republicans opposed TARP.
* 63% believe that Obama was not born in the US (or that it is unclear).

The conclusion is inescapable. Fox News is deliberately misinforming their viewers and they are doing it for a reason. Every issue above is one in which the Republican Party had a vested interest. They benefited from the ignorance that Fox News helped to proliferate. The results were apparent in the election last month as voters based their decisions on demonstrably false information fed to them by Fox News.

By the way, the rest of the media was not blameless. CNN and the broadcast network news operations fared only slightly better in many cases. Even MSNBC, which had the best record of accurately informing viewers, has a ways to go before they can brag about it.

This has received national media attention. With all this publicity, there must be some truth to it. I'm sure that the University involved would not risk their reputation and the prof that ran it would NOT risk his tenure and losing his job over a fraudulent study.

In any event, please feel free to show us a legitimate study that disputes the facts outlined above.

Crazy-Like-A-Fox News Viewers
By Ann Coulter
FrontPageMagazine.com | Thursday, May 13, 2004

Last week, John S. Carroll, editor of the Los Angeles Times, delivered a lecture during "Ethics Week" of the Society of Professional Journalists. The speaker has not yet been announced for "Abstinence Week" of the Society of Professional Whores.

Showing the fierce independence of the mainstream media, Carroll's speech was yet another liberal rant about the threat to freedom and democracy posed by the Fox News Channel. Carroll cited the hoax poll liberals quote every 10 minutes that purports to show people who watch Fox News are ignorant retards.

The poll was taken by the "Program on International Policy Attitudes," which specializes in polling Americans about pointless little factoids loved by liberals. One PIPA poll, for example, asked whether "so far this year, more Israelis or more Palestinians have died in the conflict, or is the number roughly equal?" To the shock and dismay of the researchers, "only 32 percent of respondents were aware that more deaths have occurred on the Palestinian side than on the Israeli side."

There was no poll question about which group was more likely to die as a result of suicide bombings against innocent civilians and which as a result of strategic strikes against known terrorists. During World War II, PIPA would have been issuing indignant press releases announcing that "only 32 percent of respondents are aware Hitler is kind to his dog."

The most famous PIPA poll claims to demonstrate that "the Fox News audience showed the highest average rate of misperceptions" about the war with Iraq – by which they mean "misperceptions of pointless liberal factoids about the war with Iraq." You say the average American can't regurgitate liberal talking points on command? Well, I'll be darned! And the public schools are trying so hard!

The poll asked questions like this: "Is it your impression that the U.S. has or has not found clear evidence in Iraq that Saddam Hussein was working closely with the al-Qaida terrorist organization?" Sixty-seven percent of Fox News Channel viewers said the United States had found evidence of a link. Liberals view this as a "misperception."

Admittedly the evidence may not be as "clear" as the evidence proving a link between Osama bin Laden and Halliburton, but among other evidence connecting Iraq to al-Qaida, consider just these three items.

Last year papers were found in Iraqi intelligence headquarters documenting Saddam's feverish efforts to establish a working relationship with al-Qaida. In response to Iraq's generous invitation to pay all travel and hotel expenses, a top aide to Osama bin Laden visited Iraq in 1998, bearing a message from bin Laden. The meeting went so well that bin Laden's aide stayed for a week. Iraq intelligence officers sent a message back to bin Laden, the documents note, concerning "the future of our relationship."

In addition, according to Czech intelligence, a few months before the 9-11 attacks, Mohammed Atta met with Iraqi intelligence agents in Prague.

Finally, a Clinton-appointed federal judge, U.S. District Court judge Harold Baer, has made a legal finding that Iraq was behind the 9-11 attacks – a ruling upheld by the 2nd Circuit Court of Appeals last October. When some judge discovers a right to gay marriage in a 200-year-old document written by John Adams, Americans are forced to treat the decision like the God-given truth. But when a federal judge issues a decision concluding that Iraq was behind the 9-11 attacks, it is a "misperception" being foisted on the nation by Fox New Channel.

Interestingly, liberals refuse to believe Czech intelligence on the Prague meeting ... because the CIA doesn't believe it. Apparently, this is the lone, singular assertion by the CIA that liberals wholeheartedly trust. The CIA also concluded that evidence of WMDs in Iraq was – in the words of CIA director George Tenet – a "slam dunk case." But liberals hysterically denounce that CIA conclusion as a "misperception" created by Fox News Channel.

Thus another question in the PIPA poll was this: "Since the war with Iraq ended, is it your impression that the U.S. has or has not found Iraqi weapons of mass destruction?" Thirty-three percent of Fox News viewers said they believed the U.S. had found WMDs, compared to only 11 percent of those smart NPR listeners. (How about asking NPR listeners which kills more children – handguns or buckets?)

By "weapons of mass destruction," what liberals mean is: missiles pointed at Washington, D.C., with their "Ready to Fire" lights blinking ominously and their warhead payloads clearly marked "Weapons of Mass Destruction! Next Stop, The Great Satan America!" – basically what you might see on an episode of the original "Batman" TV series. When we didn't find that, the "Bush lied, kids died!" screaming began.

David Kay's report said we hadn't found "stockpiles" of WMDs in Iraq, but we have found:

•chemical and biological weapons systems, plans, "recipes" and equipment, all of which could have resumed production on a moment's notice with Saddam's approval;

•reference strains of a wide variety of biological-weapons agents (found in the home of a prominent Iraqi biological warfare scientist);

•new research on brucella and Congo-Crimean hemorrhagic fever, and continuing work on ricin and aflatoxin;

•a prison laboratory complex for testing biological weapons on humans;

•long-range missiles (prohibited by United Nations resolutions) suitable for delivering WMDs;

•documents showing Saddam tried to obtain long-range ballistic missiles from North Korea;

•facilities for manufacturing fuel propellant useful only for prohibited Scud-variant missiles.

Sorry to bore Fox News viewers with these facts. I'm doing it as a favor to readers of the Los Angeles Times.

The Program on International Policy Attitudes is a joint program by the Center on Policy Attitudes (COPA) and the Center for International and Security Studies at Maryland.

5701. Re: Why FCC should reign in Fox News

For far too long, the question of net neutrality has hamstrung the FCC and prevented needed action on far more urgent, and real, problems. Today’s vote, we trust, will put this issue behind us with a compromise that appears to balance major differences despite a number of lingering concerns.

We appreciate the views expressed publicly by Commissioners McDowell and Baker. Theirs is, we feel, a position supported by the factual record in front of the Commission, and by law. It would also be our preference, especially given the utter absence of any evidence that abuses are occurring in the Internet market, let alone any of the gravity to justify government intervention.

At the same time, we recognize the determination of the Chairman to move forward with a rulemaking. In this circumstance, which is not ideal, our overarching concern is to bring market certainty so that investment and job creation can go forward, while ensuring that we can still meet the expectations of our customers. Though a final view must await a careful reading of the FCC’s order, we believe the Chairman’s compromise can provide this certainty while taking steps to preserve flexibility for investment and innovation.

In particular, we would like to commend Chairman Genachowski and his staff for seeking a fair middle ground in this contentious debate. As we have seen in many issues, there are always radical voices urging heavy-handed government regulation and control of free markets. Such voices have not been absent from the net neutrality debate despite their repudiation by the American public.

Too often, well-funded ideologues have used intimidation, vilification, and fear-mongering to advance their goal that government control the Internet and other forms of communication without regard for their impact on the jobs and livelihoods of millions already challenged by a difficult economy. The Commission’s apparent rejection of such unfeeling dogma is an added reason to be heartened by today’s FCC vote.

I have never met a shrink which was not just mentally ill, but usually borderline insane.

However, in this case, he/she may have it right, the politicians, both republicans and democrats are nothing but psychotic criminals ... nixon, regan, clinton, two bushes, obama ... and even before them!

When it blew out my bowels

Merry Christmas he sang

Hello,

I just received my copy of WRTH 2011 and... surprise !!
After having ignored it for several years, there is eventually a review of the Degen 1103.. disappointingly, it is absolutely obscene ! The 1103 is depicted as being almost useless on all bands, and much worse than the Tecsun PL310...
This is so ludicrous that I must conclude that reviewers at WRTH are incompetent (and I don't believe this) or heavily biased (ads?)...
Whichever is the case, I won't trust their opinion any longer..

Among the charges against Manning is leaking of the gun video of an Apache helicopter during an attack in Baghdad in 2007, which was widely broadcast in the mainstream media and remembered for the graphic footage of a group of Iraqi men being blown apart and dismembered by the Apache's 30mm cannon. Less remarked upon, but critical, is the attack recorded soon afterward, upon a man wounded in the attack and other men attempting to evacuate him in a van. Manning called it "the van thing." Even on military blogs, there is broad agreement that although the first attack, as brutal as it seemed, was technically within the rules of engagement because a rocket launcher was found on the scene, the second attack constituted a clear war crime. Attacks on the wounded and those attempting to evacuate them are known by all soldiers to be illegal. The Marine Corps Study Guide reinforces Article 12 of the Geneva Conventions that:

"wounded or sick, shall be respected and protected in all circumstances. They shall be treated humanely and cared for by the Party to the conflict ... Any attempts upon their lives, or violence to their persons, shall be strictly prohibited; in particular, they shall not be murdered or exterminated ..."

The Marine Corp Guide states:

"Marines do not attack medical personnel, facilities, or equipment. Both friendly and enemy medical personnel are to be encouraged to come to the battlefield in safety to care for the wounded combatants."

It is in the second attack, upon the wounded man and those attempting to evacuate him, that the Apache gunner is heard champing at the bit and impatiently requesting permission to open fire. It is in this aftermath that Spc. Ethan McCord, now an outspoken opponent of the wars, discovers the children who have been wounded in the van and runs with them to an armored vehicle to get them to help, after another soldier runs away vomiting.

Apparently anything but naive about the carnage which happened in Iraq every day, Manning wrote to Adrian Lamo about the gunship video:

"At first glance it was just a bunch of guys getting shot up by a helicopter ... No big deal ... about two dozen more where that came from, right? But something struck me as odd with the van thing and also the fact it was being stored in a JAG officer's directory. So I looked into it."

The JAG is the judge advocate general, a military prosecutor. Yet, there are no charges pending against the Apache gunner or the ground controller who gave him permission to fire. Manning wrote to Lamo that his biggest worry if found out to be the leaker would be to "get my side of the story out, before everything was twisted around to make me look like Nidal Hassan (the Fort Hood shooter.)"

Manning did, as many point out, sign an agreement to not disclose classified materials. He also, however, swore a higher oath to uphold and defend the US Constitution, and his agreement did not include war crimes.

especially when there's so much cleavage involved.

My actual news sources are the BBC World Service and

Smith is exactly what the elites want. They want you to lose faith in our system. They want you to not participate in a constructive manner, because when that happens they lose. Watch how they throw the poor "TEA Party" under the bus.

Elihu Thomson was a Canadian who made batteries and relays. He partnered with an inventor from New Jersey (Edison) and a banker from New York (Morgan) and started the General Electic company. GE partnered with the English Marconi company to form RCA. RCA bought Victor Talking Book company. GE partnered with Matshshita to form Japan Victor Company. Thomson Interactive (now Technicolor? at Universal City?) owns the RCA, GE, and JVC consumer brands as far as I know. GE used to own Universal City (where Technicolor has a huge presence) but they are selling 51% to Comcast cable.

Ha ha! The growth is concentrated in the 4 liberal megalopoli and is brown people and immigrants from communist California.

Metroplex a hot spot

But the growth trend isn't playing out evenly across the state.

"It's all concentrated in four parts of the state: Dallas-Fort Worth, Houston-Galveston, San Antonio-Austin and the Rio Grande Valley," Murdock said.

Those areas account for about 90 percent of the change in the state's population, he said. "There are going to be lots of Texans in lots of parts of the state saying, 'That isn't us.' It's feast or famine."

Experts don't expect Texas' growth to slow anytime soon.

"We shouldn't just assume the population dynamics of the last three or four years will stay the same," Eschbach cautioned. "We should expect to see some readjustments going forward, and I suspect Texas domestic migration will slow slightly. The recession has made some distortions of migration patterns.

"But in the foreseeable future, I don't see Texas losing its position as a growth leader."

Try 11880 kHz for Radio Australia. 10-11 AM your time.

Late morning and mid-day is probably the worst time of day to try to listen in Western North America. Even in the summer, when the signal propagation is better, about all there is to listen to is the Chinese Firedrake jammers and the South American religious stations in Spanish.

And it's the worst time of the year. There are times, in the winter in the dead of night when there are normally a number of Japanese/Chinese and Australian signals, when propagations is bad that you may only get 1 signal, Radio New Zealand.

Early morning is better when you can pick up the evening and night time signals for the audience on the other side of the Pacific. But they generally shut down by 9 or 10 AM Mountain time. (Or 8 AM here in Seattle).
6, 7 and 9 MHz bands, mostly. BBC on 9740, 6195, 5875 kHz. Radio Australia on 9580, 9580, 6020, 7240, 5995 kHz. New Zealand on 6170?.

Afternoons, try 17795 for Radio Australia at 4 PM Mountain time.

Later, in the 6 MHz band, there should be strong signals from Cuba, and Radio Netherlands in Dutch.

During the summer, when propagation is better, late morning reception of some signals from Europe and there's daytime reception of signals aimed at Africa on the 11 and 15 Mhz bands.

The reality: http://tinyurl.com/2unjzah --------------

American voters were quizzed on their knowledge of issues and facts raised in the 2010 midterm elections, in a survey by World Public Opinion, a project managed by the Program on International Policy Attitudes at the University of Maryland. Respondents were also asked where they get their news from: Fox News, MSNBC, CNN, newspapers, network TV news, public broadcasting.

The survey found that "substantial levels of misinformation were present in the daily consumers of all news sources." But Fox News viewers were significantly more likely to be misinformed than those who get their news from other sources. And, greater exposure to Fox News increased the degree to which viewers were misinformed.

For instance: 92% of Fox viewers thought the stimulus LOST jobs while the CBO and Wall Street economics said the effects were positive. CBO says 2 to 5 million jobs created or saved.

Take the quiz yourself at the above URL.

Litton sold its Westrexï¿½ trademark to someone else, and AT&T sold its Western Electricï¿½ trademark to someone else, but 99.44 percent of ALL original track negatives (motion-picture sound tracks) are recorded on a Western Electric RA-1231 optical sound recorder, since renamed Photophone, as RCA, after the acquisiton by General Electric, failed to protect the Photophone trademark.

No biggie, as an original Photophone/RCA recorder was not capable of time-aligned stereo recording, whereas Western Electric's/Westrex's was so capable since at least 1938, and RCA/Photophone is essentially defunct.

The RA-1231 product is still in new production.

For HD Radio at home, everyone's buying the awesome Sony XDRF1HD. Amazon can't keep them in stock. Fry's sold out within hours when they had them on sale a few months ago. The Radiosophy HD products were poorly thought out. Someone upgrading to HD in the home wants a tuner that hooks to their existing system so they can experience the high fidelity sound of HD, they don't what a system with low quality speakers and amplifier like in these iPod-dock-like devices.

For the first two stations I was using the Icom 756 Pro III. After I heard the Georgia station I switched to the Perseus to see what else I could hear. I was using the outdoor dipole which faces N-S, which may have helped null out the Iowa station. I switched to the box loop after 0200UTC. I found I could null out the Iowa station and hear the CA station weakly but not nearly as well as earlier.

Nobody wants them off the "air". We just want them to quit pretending to be a credible news service. "The news" has standards, and "Fox News" is lacking in many repsects. Yo can't present the truth with a lie, give them equal credibility and call yourself "balanced". What this makes you is a mindfucker.

I won a Radiosophy H101 table radio in a drawing, and it's worth every penny I paid for it.

Despite advertising claims to the contrary, the RF section is quite insensitive. This sample may be defective, but it often freezes and shows gibberish on its LCD display. The plastic case looks cheap, and the audio from its two speakers is not so great. I put it back in its original box where it has been for many months. Thought about selling it on EBay but was worried about losing my 100% feedback rating. For $29.95, this thing arguably might have been a decent enough value, but I believe the original selling price was several times that much. On the next Goodwill run I'll include it with other discarded household goods.

This company's mediocre products gave HD Radio yet another black eye. Whether or not HD Radio is a useful service, the Radiosophy company evidently sold crappy overpriced products and has justifiably gone out of business.

by Kevin Strom, WB4AIO

BEHIND THE SCENES, a sting operation was successful in outing one of the 75 meter jammers who have plagued the Liberty Net in the past, and we hope that fear of future consequences will keep him and his fellow miscreants off the air permanently. There were quite a few new callsigns heard on the Liberty Net this week, and the frequency was almost interference free.

Hereï¿½s a selection of the issues discussed this time on amateur radioï¿½s longest-running discussion net:

ï¿½ What have our armed services become today? They are flooded with huge numbers of Blacks looking for an alternative to crime and welfare (they even use violent ï¿½rapï¿½ music to work up these new-type soldiers to a frenzy before sending them off on killing assignments in the Mideast); they are now recruiting Muslims and other Third World immigrants on a massive scale; and soon they will be openly welcoming homosexuals. The US armed services have become the mercenaries of an evil multicultural empire, and conservatives should stop regarding them with their accustomed, and wildly inappropriate, reverence. (9 minutes)

ï¿½ An Austrian man was arrested and fined 800 euros for yodeling in his own yard. A Muslim immigrant neighbor claimed to be offended by the yodeling because he thought it was a mockery of the Muslim ï¿½call to prayer.ï¿½ (22 minutes)

ï¿½ The recent conservative Republican support for ï¿½Donï¿½t Ask Donï¿½t Tellï¿½ is a perfect example of the worthlessness of conservatism: A few years ago they attacked and opposed that policy; now they support it. Perpetually fighting a rearguard action and utterly without principles, they can never win and they have no vision of the future. (25 minutes)

ï¿½ In Detroit, a public official with a sub-Saharan mentality and an entrepreneurial spirit started sending out ï¿½fine noticesï¿½ to local businesses for utterly fictional ï¿½violationsï¿½ of city ordinances ï¿½ and then set up a ï¿½fine collection centerï¿½ in his own home and pocketed the proceeds. Itï¿½s good to know that everything is running normally in Zimbabwe North. (54 minutes)

ï¿½ Is the Fed using pallets of worn out Federal Reserve notes ï¿½ which are supposed to be destroyed ï¿½ to make illegal, untraceable payoffs? If not, why was one whistleblower threatened by the government for merely saying so? (2 hours 38 minutes)

ï¿½ The worldï¿½s first gold-dispensing vending machine has been installed in Boca Raton, Florida. How long will it be before MS-13 figures out a way to haul it off with a grappling hook? (2 hours 43 minutes)

ï¿½ Even the US military and the National Rifle Association are utilizing Asian slave labor. The military is now buying ship hulls and military uniforms from Communist China, and the recent NRA membership premium ï¿½ a pocket knife ï¿½ is also made there. (3 hours 5 minutes)

ï¿½ Has the Treasury Department become a vassal of the bankers and their Federal Reserve? And why does the Secret Service ï¿½ which is supposed to protect the President ï¿½ report to that very same Treasury Department? (3 hours 38 minutes)

Thanks to Marty, N2IRJ, youï¿½re able to listen to these Liberty Net recordings at home, at work, in your car, or while hiking or jogging with your portable mp3 player. And remember N2SAGï¿½s live feed during Net times that lets you hear the Liberty Net via multiple receivers ï¿½ and chat too.

Check out amateur radioï¿½s historic Liberty Net, established in 1974, every Saturday night ï¿½ on some clear frequency near 3950 kHz SSB starting at 10PM Eastern Time. Recently the net has been meeting above 3960 to avoid the BBCï¿½s deplorable digital transmissions (which sound like broadband white noise) on 3955.

Kudos and thanks go to Vic, W1WCR, for his decades of hard work for free speech and amateur radio!

"Growth" is really a misnomer. A better word would be "death." Death of the uniquely beautiful and creative people who made the America of Charles Lindbergh, Neil Armstrong, Thomas Edison, and Daniel Chester French.

The UN calls it "replacement migration," which is a pretty honest term. From a policy perspective, it should also be categorized as genocide.

With every good wish,

Lindbergh loved the Nazis. Not much of a role model there. I hear he has

Merry Christmas to you John! Chilly, but still warm here in South Florida, wish we had snow. Was wondering, when did the Victorian/Dickensian "Merry Christmas" become "Happy Christmas"? Colonials still kept the old version, kind of like "Fall" instead of "Autumn".

Genocide?

Well, I would prefer a law which makes it legal to shoot illegal alien invaders on sight ... if you are going to be shooting a bunch of them, perhaps a license should be required ...

Thomson is named after the electrical engineer Elihu Thomson, who was born in Manchester, England, on March 26, 1853. Thomson moved to Philadelphia at the age of 5, with his family. Thomson formed the Thomson-Houston Electric Company in 1879 with Edwin Houston. The company merged with the Edison General Electric Company to become the General Electric Company in 1892. In 1893, the Compagnie Franï¿½aise Thomson-Houston (CFTH) was formed in Paris, a sister company to GE in the United States. It is from this company that the modern Thomson Group would evolve.

"The ongoing tragedy of HD radio"

"It’s true that the RadioShack Accurian is the most affordable way into the appealing new club that is HD Radio, but it’s costly for all the wrong reasons. One look underneath the base of an Accurian explains its $200 [now $150 on sale] price tag. There, a sticker reads: “HD Radio Technology Under License From iBiquity Digital Corporation.” Instead of developing a radio capable of superior sound quality, I’m guessing that RadioShack paid iBiquity a fortune for the license, cheaply put together a subpar product, and passed the licensing cost on to consumers."

http://www.markramseymedia.com/2007/10/the-ongoing-tragedy-of-hd-radio/

HD Radio manufacturers, retailers, and the automakers are all trying to screw the consumers by passing along iBiquity's royalty fees. Radiosophy, and the Radio Shack Accurian for example, now history, were fine examples of this HD Radio scam playing out. Luckily, iBiquity and the automakers are now under investigation. At some point the non-HD broadcasters will file a class-action, too, and may include the HD broadcasters who felt duped by iBiquity and Harris. I know some broadcasters who are working with Keefe Bartels and have been asked to testify. The litigation wll cost iBiquity/NAB and the automakers a fortune. There is some much dishonesty involved with this system that can be traced all the way back to the FCC and Congress. I believe Rich Wood when he stated that this will make the Performance Royalties and th BP litigation look like child's play. I can't wait for Bartels and Wolf's discovery-phase. Hopefully, as the case progress in Federal Court, the media will be alerted.

This is an old Mantra. Get up to date on NPR funding. Go to:

http://www.npr.org/about/aboutnpr/publicradiofinances.html

Where we read the following, with my added CAPS:

"NPR's revenue comes primarily from fees paid by our member stations, contributions from corporate sponsors, institutional foundation grants, gifts from major donors, and fees paid by users of The Public Radio Satellite System. WE RECEIVE NO DIRECT FEDERAL FUNDING FOR OPERATIONS. The largest share of NPR's revenue comes from program fees and station dues paid by member stations that broadcast NPR programs."

Your post illustrates so much of what is wrong with Wingers. They rant and rave over subjects about which they know nothing. Zilch.

Picked up a nice pair of stereo headphones today at my usual shopping venue.

A set of AGS 111x, made in Japan, when they seemingly made some good stuff as these appear to be vintage. Pretty hefty construction, and appear to be in mint condition.

Shorted them out at the plug and using them with the Drake R7 and they sound pretty nice.

Unfortunately, you can add extra features to both low end and high end products. Perhaps iBiquity should be more selective in who it grants licenses to, but the reality is that this is the first HD Radio receiver that really sucks. It should not give HD Radio a black eye any more than a crappy CD or DVD player, or an FM radio without HD would give those technologies a black eye. Dolby licenses their technologies to companies that make both good and bad equipment, and that doesn't give a black eye to Dolby. In the case of both Dolby and iBiquity the royalty fees to receiver manufacturers are so small that it has a very minor effect on the retail price of the product.

The bottom line is that broadcasters love the IBOC concept for digital radio in general, and HD Radio in specific. It's a win-win-win-win scenario for broadcasters, transmitter manufacturers, receiver manufacturers, and consumers. The fact that around 2000 radio stations have added HD and there has not been a single instance of interference being proven says a lot about how well the technology works. Luxury auto makers don't add new technologies to their vehicles unless they are robust, and most luxury cars now offer HD Radio. It's slowly filtering down to lower cost vehicles, as is often the case with new technologies that appear first on higher end vehicles.

In 2011, hopefully we'll see more radio stations increasing their power levels for HD Radio, and perhaps some of the smaller radio stations will decide to move forward with HD Radio.

There was a strong suspicion of who one of the jammers was, based on his _modus operandi_ in past years. A local ham was contacted, within the near field of the suspect, and he confirmed the suspicions.

Then a telephone call was made to the suspect, who was not playing recordings but jamming using his own voice, and he was caught on tape with the sound of the telephone ringing in the background of his 75 meter transmission, which then ceased as he answered the phone. Confronted with the evidence, he confessed.

I'll ask my correspondent if I should publish the name of the jammer, but I can tell you now that he's well known for jamming not only the Liberty Net (for more than ten years!) but many other groups -- and for making death threats over the air, sometimes using his callsign when he does so.

With my best,

Kevin, WB4AIO.

Well, yeah, direction finding is, obviously, involved. Just guessing, I'd think teenagers are involved and using their parents stations.

Why, because I would use my 1KW mobile, hit the freeways, cruise nearby towns, drive in the country, etc., while "jamming." So, obviously, the resources available to "these would be jammers" is rather limited.

It helps to install an industrial alternator on your transportation ...

Actually, happened to me! Are you psychic?

Now, I carry a .32 Beretta Tomcat in the pocket of my windbreaker, jacket, sweatshirt ... I have used it once, spent 2 days in jail, and had it found a "good shooting", and was released, being handed a paper stating, "This is only a detention and not an arrest." Or, something like that, no longer have the paper.

I didn't even show the gun, shot though the pocket of the windbreaker, felt the bullet savagely yank my hand and jacket ... I can still see the shocked looked on his face -- as he dropped the baseball bat he was swinging.

May he rest in peace. Yanno'? If he had told me he really needed the money, and had good reason, asked nicely, I would have helped him ... it sucks, yanno'?

I should mention, for completeness, the "Special Investigator," for the county, took over a week getting the gun back to me. And, believe it or not, called my wife, while I was at work, and told her he would NOT release the gun to me, for her to come down and pick it up ...

Now my wife is no fool, I don't put up with fools, so she asked the "Special Investigator" for the county, "Who did you take the gun away from?" When he replied me, "John Smith", she simply said, "Then give it back to 'John Smith'." That same day, I went in to get my gun back ... took off work as soon as she told me!

When I retrieved my gun, it was in the 1980's, and the "Special Investigator" said to me, "I don't want to give this gun back to you. I know I will be seeing you again." (or, close to that.) And, then he slid the gun across his desk.

The prick is retired and I have NEVER shot anyone since ... I know when and where ... the world is a LOT MORE DANGEROUS NOW, I am lot more smarter, and have been VERY LUCKY!

Perhaps, I should also include, again, for completeness ... I still own a Beretta Tomcat, the old one was retired, new one now, (more guns too), and it is under my pillow at night, the Tomcat is my favorite, and in my pocket during the day ... it is a very small gun, yanno'? I used to do contracting an carry LARGE SUMS of money ... no longer, just got in the habit ...

If you get one, just remember to purchase an extra clip, if you shoot, empty four rounds before you even ask yourself, "Have I hit 'em." If the answer is no, empty the other 3 and eject the clip and shove in the next, then try again, etc. I say seven, because I DON'T carry one in the chamber, if you do, that gives you eight ... but then, I target practice at the range, religiously, and have confidence in my ability to hit the target in the area I have in mind, the heart ...

Actually, I'd expand on that, let you determine if what I say has any truth or not. The "ghetto" and the people in it, usually prey upon other people in their areas. Indeed, it is usually a case of the black poor victimizing the black poor, the poor whites victimizing other poor whites ... however, wake up people!

They are being reduced to having nothing, now they will be moving into the better neighborhoods and victimizing the people which still have something, middle class?, YES, rich, YES ... this is all headed your way, if you are not already seeing it, it is a miracle ...

Trust me, coming to a neighborhood near you, AND SOON ...

dave, I know you're pissed and I can't really say I blame you. The fact is there were a limited number of souls to be placed in humanoid forms.

You, along with ninety nine percent of the planet didn't get one. Only the Chosen received souls. Get used to it.

That doesn't mean God doesn't love you. He does, much in the same way he loves trees and little animals, just not quite as much as His own children.

Here is proof of God spending quality time with His children's hired help:

Within four days of getting thrown out of the temple, the money changers had Jesus on the cross. They even went through four or five courts to get the best verdict money could buy.

My guess is that Portugal,Turkey,Switzerland,Sweden all made enormous profits during WWII. Spain and Ireland weren't as heavily involved as far as trading with the Allies AND the Axis members. No wonder Switzerland is so wealthy...

Whose history are you relating here? It certainly is not the Elihu Thomson who formed Thomson-Houston in Lynn, Mass. with a former teacher.

That Elihu Thomson was born in England, but moved to Philadelphia at age 5. Thomson and his teacher, Edwin Houston, were involved primarily with arc lighting and generators and distribution systems for these. They formed Thomson-Houston with financing and business support from Charles Coffin in 1883. Thomson-Houston bought Charles Brush's complementary arc lighting patents and technology in 1888.

Thomson-Houston, which was a very successful and profitable business, merged with Edison General Electric of Schenectady, which was not a profitable and successful business, but which held complementary patents, particularly in incandescent lighting. An additional acquisition of Rudolf Eickemeyer's business and patents (and the services of Charles P. Steinmetz) in 1893, brought AC technology complementing the work T-H had begun. While the resulting company was named "General Electric," its business core was that of Thomson-Houston. All of Edison's focus was on DC; his opposition to AC was well-known with his condemnation of Westinghouse's development of AC distribution systems.

Radio Corporation of America (RCA) was a patent pool formed from the American Marconi interests in 1916. The patent pool was originally owned by GE, Westinghouse, and AT&T. It was strictly a research-and-development operation until 1928, when RCA bought out Victor Talking Machine Company. Products such as the Radiola radios of the early 1920's were marketed under the RCA name but were actually built by GE and Westinghouse. AT&T dropped out of the pool fairly early on.

What Westinghouse had were Tesla's patents, which had their primary focus on multiphase AC. A great deal of what was needed for AC engineering came from Steinmetz's work (description of magnetic hysteresis, trigonometric analysis of AC circuits).

A quick look at Wikepedia articles on topics surrounding these development shows a whole bunch of half-truths and some errors. The best scholarly sources on the development of electrical power technology come from serious history of technology scholars, starting with Thomas P. Hughes, "American Genesis." Hughes, in general, is the current dean of history-of-technology scholarship, and much of his work has its focus on this area.

What is the Golden Come-Along Award?

The Golden Come-Along Award is given to that individual who has been deemed to have had his/her head stuck so far up their ass during the previous year that it would require the assistance of a come-along to pull it out.

This year's recipient is of course Dave Rickmers, representing some God forsaken location in the bankrupt State of California, who started off in good form and continued non stop through out the year.

Congratulations Dave, what a stellar performance!

That has a "special" meaning coming from you, Steve. You got chutzpah

Even though you are a dick and an fuckwad for picking a fight on fucking

I never took a look at the iBiquity fee structures. I just now went online and did that. I didn't immediately find the $50 chipset royalty for radio receivers but did find the broadcaster license fees. Wow.

I installed a Pioneer HD Radio receiver in my car. The Pioneer adapter was $100, and I guess half that was the royalty. Geez. The device's FM section works pretty well but isn't nearly as good as the "Supertuner" in the main receiver chassis. As well it works very poorly on AM - unacceptable. I complained strongly to Crutchfield, and they sent me a replacement, but that sample was also lousy.

Creatively, I arranged a Motorola Y adapter and pigtail so that I can use the Supertuner for analog radio and only use the HD Radio adapter when I need it.

The Pioneer system and the full length car antenna does receive HD Radio pretty well on FM, but now I realize that if I couldn't have come up with the Y cable arrangement, I'd again have a crappy radio overall since the Pioneer adapter is poorly nuanced compared to their analog tuner.

When I lump my experience with two HD Radio receivers - the Radiosophy I got free and the Pioneer auto receiver - with knowledge of this evidently outrageous iBiquity fee structure, I see that HD Radio is DOA as a product.

> HD Radio manufacturers, retailers, and the automakers are all trying to

This is all quite a marketing bummer and blunder. It's a real jaw dropper.

Actually, I don't use the HD Radio in my car anymore. I plug my DroidX phone into the Pioneer's audio jacks and listen to streaming audio from the Internet. Maybe I'll just remove the HD Radio kludge from the car since my Y-adapter slightly degrades the analog FM performance.

I point out in another post that my Pioneer HD Radio car receiver also has a number of problems. I've had 100% poor luck so far as a consumer.

Yes, but there's a vibrant marketplace for CD/DVD players. Thousands of them are available in the competitive marketplace. If there are only a few HD Radio models available, and a significant percentage of them may have problems in addition to high cost, then you've got a black eye marketing scenario for radio in general.

The basic technology seems to work OK based on my own car listening experience, but in a larger context I now understand that the product is a stiff, particularly since I found that I can plug my DroidX phone into the car radio's audio jacks and listen to Internet streamed audio while driving. It works surprisingly well.

I have to ask if by any chance you are an iBiquity shill? I'm glad I'm no longer a broadcast engineer and only would have to deal with these issues as a consumer.

NPR Derives 41% of Funding From YOUR Taxes

How Public Is NPR's Funding? Options
By Mark Browning

De-fund NPR! In the wake of the firing of Juan Williams by National Public Radio, we've once again heard conservative voices issue that call. NPR representatives respond, as they always do when their dependence on government purse strings is noted, by arguing that only two or three percent of the service's money comes from the federal government. NPR apologist Norah O'Donnell recently threw out a one to three-percent figure on MSNBC.

Norah's New Math Grossly Understates NPR's Fed Funding
http://www.newsbusters.org/blogs/mark-finkelstein/2010/10/22/norahs-new-math-grossly-understates-nprs-fed-funding

We don't see these people volunteering to give up that three percent, but we have to admit that this amount of funding is not the gigantic boondoggle we might prefer to oppose. Is this three-percent number a fair claim by the NPR crowd? Apparently, in a very limited sense, it is, but in a more comprehensive analysis, it is nowhere near accurate.

To understand NPR funding, we have to recognize that public radio is a two-tier operation. There is, on the one hand, the network itself, the Washington-based producer of programs that actually terminated Juan Williams' contract. On the other hand, there is the collection of some nine hundred NPR affiliate radio stations who bring this programming to radios around the United States. We cannot hope to understand NPR's finances without understanding the stations as well, so let's begin there.

According to information available from the NPR website [Oct 2010], http://www.npr.org/about/aboutnpr/publicradiofinances.html local radio station money comes from the following sources:

32.1% Individual contributions

21.1% Business contributions

13.6% University funds

10.1% Corporation for Public Broadcasting funds

9.6% Foundation money

5.6% Federal, state, and local government funds

7.6% Other

At first glance, this distribution of funds seems to confirm that public radio's support does not come in large amounts from the direct allocation of tax moneys. After all, 5.6% is not a gigantic portion of the budget, is it? But let's look more closely. That 10.1% that comes from the Corporation for Public Broadcasting is 99% provided by -- you guessed it -- the federal government. Those university funds, whenever they are provided by a public university, represent taxpayer-provided dollars. We can safely assert that three out of four university-supported stations are publicly funded, which means that more than 10% (three-quarters of that 13.6%) is taken from the taxpayer's pockets.

So far, we find that NPR member stations count on direct or indirect taxpayer money for some 25% of their funds -- and that's before we consider some of the largest portions of their budgets.

Obviously the support by individuals, businesses, and foundations does not constitute taxpayer funding, right? Not so fast. These donations are tax-deductible; thus, they are subsidized by the government. Granted, not every gift is actually reflected on an individual or business tax return, and not all of those that are itemized wind up offsetting high marginal tax rates. Still, it is reasonable to believe that on average, these gifts result in deductions at the 25% tax bracket. Since these three categories add up to roughly 64% of station funds, we can reasonably argue that 16% of that money (64% x 0.25) is subsidized by the tax code.

In the end, then, local NPR affiliates derive something like 41% of their funding from taxes, either directly or indirectly.

What about the entity that generated all the buzz for firing Juan Williams? Interestingly, despite their conflicting 2% and 3% claims, the NPR website says, "We receive no direct federal funding for operations." Of course, that sort of statement leaves open the possibility of receiving direct federal funding for other purposes. What are those? They don't volunteer that information easily. What they do point out prominently is that the biggest source of money is from member stations. Local stations pay dues and fees for the programs they rebroadcast. This money, recorded as Station Programming Fees (40%), Membership Dues (1%), and Distribution Services (8%), accounts for nearly half of NPR's funds.

Why is this significant? You do recall that some 41% of local station money came from taxpayers, right? If 50% of funding comes from money that is 40% derived from taxes, then another 20% of NPR's budget comes, indirectly, from taxpayers. Twenty percent! That's a long way from the 2%-3% figures, isn't it?

The next huge chunk of NPR income comes from "Sponsorships." These are the things that, in any other media outlet, would be called advertisements. We could argue that sponsorship money is tax-deductible and therefore partly taxpayer-funded, but, lest we look like double-standard-wielding lefties, we would have to make the same argument for the ads that car companies run on ABC and CBS. Let's face it: virtually every large corporation in America enjoys some form of government largesse. That's what happens when government tentacles reach into all portions of our lives.

On the other hand, there is much more clarity when we look to the 10% "Grants and Contributions" category that represents direct taxpayer gifting (most prominently by way of the Corporation for Public Broadcasting) and indirect taxpayer support by way of tax deductions. Is it reasonable to say that half of that 10% comes in one way or another from taxes? I think so, but I'll settle for saying that this category adds just 3% to the total. This brings our total of taxpayer support for the entire NPR budget to around 23%.

Given that only 89% of the NPR income pie comes from external sources (the rest coming from investment returns), it is not unreasonable to assert that more than 25% of NPR funds from outside sources actually comes from taxpayers. That's not an overwhelming portion of the budget, but it's a long way from two to three percent.

As annoying as I find the bias at MSNBC or the New York Times, I will respect to the end their right to be as biased as they'd like. What they do with their money and whatever funds they can convince advertisers to kick in is their own business. The same does not apply to the likes of NPR. That's your money and my money going into their coffers and funding that unbalanced message. We need to demand that NPR either be pushed away from the public trough or be required to present a modicum of evenhandedness.

I have three old farm jacks like that.Two of them are bent, they were bent when I bought them at a scrap iron yard about thirty years ago.I was thinking some day I might wop on them with my sledge hammer and straighten them out.I have a lot of old jacks, including some old, old, old auto jacks too.Two of my hydraulic jacks are rated at thirty tons capacity.

Hello,

Since I make the website at the http://shortwave.tk
I arranged a script to produce a A5 format pdf:

http://users.fulladsl.be/spb13810/research/mini.pdf

It should look OK on 7"(or more) tablets.

(to make this error good, as we say):

And I also made some kind of tables that can be imported into gnumeric/openoffice calc.

I seperated the frequencies, then I made fields for the hours on that freq, and then again seperated the languages ...
This gives a 49000+ files list, assembled in http://users.fulladsl.be/spb13810/research/freqtar.bz2

The files more or less say what's inside...
The 13660 file is for freq 13660, the file 13660 Language E is about English on 13660, and the seperated per hour ...

It's true, I can start with the Stantion name, then seperate for each hour

Then again, I can make lists for langauges, and seperate for each hour, and the for stations ...

Have fun!

I was just informed by one of those involved that it's okay to say who the jammer was. It was Art Visser, W9ART.

Strange that some have a problem with the message of Jesus, it is on of respect, self-preservation, basic human rights and freedoms, etc.

You, by the simple rights of God, are granted certain freedoms and privileges, and no man, group of men, government, or other are ever justified in ignoring this -- other than other than having the Penality of death be applied to them.

Now, do you SUPPORT unjust, illegal and insane laws and penalties applied? HELL NOT, we need to end the illegal actions of our false public servants, from the president on down -- NOW!

Cite one instance, one report in which NPR has not been utterly fair and given full voice to Conservative, Liberal, Republican and Democrat. The problem with you Rightards is, and always has been, if a news show isn't a propaganda front for wingnuts, to you its the enemy.
You don't believe in fair, balanced, or accurate reporting, all of which NPR provides.

http://www.americanthinker.com/2010/10/how_public_is_nprs_funding.html taxpayers. That's not an overwhelming portion of the budget, but it's a long way from two to three percent.

Both the military and State Department are enumerated powers. Not so with funding NPR.

If we cut all unconstitutional spending we would have a very much smaller budget.

The last thing the ruling elite (Koch Brothers, the Olins, the Scaifes, etc.) wants is a healthy competent source of unbiased news. As long as the people find out who's pulling the strings their power is limited.

NPR may be our last fort in the war against the middle class being waged by very mean amoral rich people.

Fine. The Coast Guard is the only standing army enumerated. Import duties and excise taxes are the only legal way to fund the government.
We immediately recall all troops from all undeclared wars, and shut NASA down, because there's not one mention of rocket ships in the Constitution.

We already had that argument during the Enlightenment; the Social Contract, which is the basis of democratic republican government, ensued. It says we surrender some personal liberty to advance the public good. The Founders were heavily into Locke and Rousseau, I suggest you follow suit, so you don't come off like a moron around here. The Social Contract is based on the notion of allegiance, that is to say 'voluntary' acceptance, not imposition. It should become increasingly clear that people are opting out of impositions and resisting obedience. The Social Contract is based on individuals not a collective. There is no collective, only individuals.

I said "like a moron". If you don't want to play I hear there's a cabin for sale in Montana. Here's a conundrum vis a vis your allegedly libertarian stance, that has never been truer.

The Kochs operate oil refineries in Alaska, Texas, and Minnesota, and control some four thousand miles of pipeline. Koch Industries owns Brawny paper towels, Dixie cups, Georgia-Pacific lumber, Stainmaster carpet, and Lycra, among other products. Forbes ranks it as the second-largest private company in the country, after Cargill, and its consistent profitability has made David and Charles Kochï¿½who, years ago, bought out two other brothersï¿½among the richest men in America. Their combined fortune of thirty-five billion dollars is exceeded only by those of Bill Gates and Warren Buffett.

The Kochs are longtime libertarians who believe in drastically lower personal and corporate taxes, minimal social services for the needy, and much less oversight of industryï¿½especially environmental regulation.
These views dovetail with the brothersï¿½ corporate interests. In a study released this spring, the University of Massachusetts at Amherstï¿½s Political Economy Research Institute named Koch Industries one of the top ten air polluters in the United States. And Greenpeace issued a report identifying the company as a ï¿½kingpin of climate science denial.ï¿½
The report showed that, from 2005 to 2008, the Kochs vastly outdid ExxonMobil in giving money to organizations fighting legislation related to climate change, underwriting a huge network of foundations, think tanks, and political front groups. Indeed, the brothers have funded opposition campaigns against so many Obama Administration policiesï¿½from health-care reform to the economic-stimulus programï¿½that, in political circles, their ideological network is known as the Kochtopus.

Radio and TV licensees used to be required to provide public service programming.
That's dead...all we get is infomercials and right wing propaganda.
AM radio has become a total wasteland

NPR is the only place that is broadcasting public service programming.

FORCED to DENY (usually in a stuttering panic) what he so clearly

In fact, if you really want a good laugh just google Rosell19 (rosieturds original nym)...

Needless to say, what you'll find there is far more conclusive of Roselles' idiocy than the selections I've chosen for posterirty...

In particular, note how one Kurt Nicklas drove Gary batty going back ten years...

It was Nicklas who first reported him his ISP AND the FBI for his sickening threats against Katherine Harris amidst Bush v. Gore. Gary was kicked off his ISP and whether or not he heard from the FBI, he never dared to post another deaht-threat.

Never again...

HEH HEH

Gary 'YOORG: Roselles...a brief usenet history:

Just as a FYI, the moron who's ass you're kicking is one Gary Roselles, one of the most vile usenet posters to ever peck at a keyboard.

His known profile shows him to be a 70-year old sociopath who lives in a HUD-owned, government apartment project in Rapid City, SD (his address can actually be found on the www.hud.gov website). His history of sickening usenet posts are infamous and 'legendary' - from the occassions in which he threatened to blow up Mt. Rushmore and 'make it look like a mining accident' (he was a 'miner' at Homestake LLC, a mining corporation in nearby Lead, SD) to the time he publically called for the shooting death of then-FL Sect. Of State Katherine Harris. He also threatened to 'put a bullet between the eyes' of the teenage daughter of a fellow poster who dared make a monkey out of him (much like you're doing now, IMA).

The Harris episode got him kicked off his ISP AND reported to the FBI and since then, he's taken to a lower-grade vileness -- mostly posting racial slurs and seriously stupid 'political' pronouncements.

He's been mocked, laughed at, ridiculed and humiliated by scores of posters over the years which in turn forced him to opt-out-of the google archives AND change his nym on a regular basis so as to slither out of killfiles.

And as you no doubt will discover, he lacks the native intellegent to actually post a cite so don't expect him to ever back up any of the nonsense he spews -- like most leftists, he thinks stating some grossly biased, imagined shit over and over makes something 'true'...

(A technique he/they picked that up from their heroes, Lenin and Stalin, btw).

And speaking of cites, here are a few choice quotes from Roselles selected from the google archives -- just as he wrote 'em (links available upon request):

Well, one way or another, it is time to put roswell to rest. Now, to do this, the military only has to come forward and tell what really crashed there, because it damn well wasn't a balloon ... and, to disclose what or who they put in the coffins they got from the undertaker in the town ...

Just another of the far too many postings that pollute this fine group.

Would you care to tell me why you chose that particular message as an example of the garbage within this group?

Isn't a homosexual ex-militia commander in Michigan attacking heterosexual values of any merit in your pantheon of pollution?

Doesn't a cross dressing bestialist from Mississippi cross the line? A zionist defender of welfare fraud by polygamist Mormon perverts passes your test for acceptability? Countless other postings with more merit for criticism and you pick on THIS one.

Who are you working for?

- The Social Contract is based on the notion of allegiance,

CORRECT

There is NO 'Collective' in American "Individual" Freedoms [.]

* LIFE : The Individual's Life -not-a- Collective Life
* LIBERTY : The Individual's Liberty -not-a- Collective Liberty
* THE PURSUIT OF HAPPINESS :
The Individual's Pursuit of Happiness {Choice & Freedom}
-not-a- Collective Happiness {Dictated by Others}

There Is The American Individual Freedom -of- "Free"

Credible information is essential to a healthy democratic republic.
Misinformed voters are dangerous. Triumph of the will and all that.

Do you seriously think ad supported media will fairly discuss campaign finance reform, when they are the ones who sell all the expensive air time?

Do you think a magazine whose #1 advertiser is a car company is going to push mass transit?

Get real. The point of "public broadcasting" is freedom from outside commercial interests. They can tell the story straight up the middle and let the pieces fall where they may. NPR is the only media NOT controlled by business interests; that's why the oligarchs and their thugs hate NPR.

Give it more time. Some stations, like the Voice of Russia, still have substantial blocks of time allocated to English. There are many interesting amateur AM stations to listen to as well.

And some of the stations you characterize as exclusively for fundamentalist nonsense are actually free speech stations, who sell time to those shut out of the mainstream media. Yes, those with religious hobbyhorses to ride may dominate such stations, but they also occasionally carry iconoclasts and free thinkers -- and sometimes just creative people with something interesting or unusual to say.

There's a lot out there.

With all good wishes,

Kevin, WB4AIO.

Kenya was on '60 Minutes' today. Wildebeests are running out of space

Abraham Vereide, an immigrant preacher who in 1935 organized a small group of businessmen sympathetic to European fascism, fusing the far right with his own polite but authoritarian faith. From that core, Vereide built an international network of fundamentalists who spoke the language of establishment power, a "family" that thrives to this day. In public, they host Prayer Breakfasts; in private, they preach a gospel of "biblical capitalism," military might, and American empire. Citing Hitler, Lenin, and Mao as leadership models, the Family's current leader, Doug Coe, declares, "We work with power where we can, build new power where we can't."

Amen to that! I am all for using American Liberty to spread the Good News that Jesus is Lord of Lord and King of Kings.
If you've read our founders, you know that they said God was in the midst of their discussions on creating the US Constitution and Bill of Rights. In fact, the strongly believed that America was created by God.

Most amateur radio uses single sideband now but I think on the 107 you put it in CW to turn the BFO on and use the bandspread to tune in the SSB stations.
There is an area to find AM amateur stations 3.880-3.890MHz.
Otherwise in SSB - At night - 1.8-2.0MHz for 160 meters and 3.6-4.0MHz for 75-80 meters.
Day and night 7.125-7.3MHz for 40 meters.
Daytiime -14.15-14.35 for 20 meters.
If you have internet access check this for more frequencies:

http://www.arrl.org/frequency-allocations

Jim(MI)

P.S. - Some shortwave stations can be found in the upper part of the 40 meter amateur band. I am listening to Radio Australia right now on 7.240MHz @ 1430UTC.

Religious broadcasters see themselves on mission, and so don't mind the negative cash flow.
e.g. EWTN.
Goverments also see same money drain, don't have a mission, and so

You should practice using the BFO to tune SSB. Turn down the RF gain, tune the BFO pitch to about 1,500 cycles, then slowly tune the bandspread over an SSB signal. Play with it.

Luke 12:51 Suppose ye that I am come to give peace on earth? I tell you, Nay; but rather division:
12:52 For from henceforth there shall be five in one house divided, three against two, and two against three.

22:35 And he said unto them, When I sent you without purse, and 22:36 Then said he unto them, But now, he that hath a purse, let

Time of day matters a lot. Shortwave is actually regional, there are a lot fewer programs in English targeting North America during prime time now (Cuba, Voice of Russia propagation permitting, various hour long relays from several nations from Radio Canada's site), and nobody much during the day, you have to listen to when the people who are still getting targeted are awake. Try morning for signals aimed at Asia, afternoon and evening for Africa.

Time of year matters, too. Propagation to North America around the Winter Solstice sucks compared to summertime.

You are correct, shortwave is NOT what it used to be in the 70's and even into the 80's.

However, sting up a decent antenna. Those religious stations can be picked up with a coat hanger for an antenna!

Hello,

It is not that bad. Several international broadcasters stopped with SW (or have reduced their programming), but there are still many international stations with English Service (my location is Europe, Netherlands).

Besides the international broadcasters, the amateur bands are active (CW, SSB, some AM) and aviation still uses HF (SSB).

If you want to receive the weaker stations also, erect an outdoor antenna away from interferers (TV, switching wall warts, CFL, etc).
Make sure that interference doesn't reach the antenna via the coaxial shield.

Good luck re-exploring HF.

So it was the South Bend Shithead? Well that's no surprise. I figured it was either him or "Krazy Jewish Indian". W9ART regularly jammed the LIberty Net in the 90's. IIRC, he was eventually warned (cited?) by the FCC, after which he presumably behaved himself. I certainly hope somebody sent this latest evidence to the FCC, although if ART is still the same raving lunatic left-wing socialist union thug he used to be, Imam Omaumau's FCC might choose to look the other way.

6145. STOP The FCC Media Marxist Internet Takeover

Network neutrality (also known by the even more lovely sounding marketing term “open Internet”) is an outgrowth of the larger so-called media reform project of radical left-wing activists like

Robert McChesney

http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/individualProfile.asp?indid=2227
http://www.keywiki.org/index.php/Robert_McChesney

board member of Marxist magazine and the socialist founder of the misnamed group

Free Press,

http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/printgroupProfile.asp?grpid=7103

which has enormous influence on the FCC, where its former communications director, Jen Howard, is FCC Chairman Julius Genachowski’s press secretary.

McChesney explained where net neutrality leads to SocialistProject.ca:

"You will never ever, in any circumstance, win any struggle at any time. That being said, we have a long way to go. At the moment, the battle over network neutrality is not to completely eliminate the telephone and cable companies. We are not at that point yet. But the ultimate goal is to get rid of the media capitalists in the phone and cable companies and to divest them from control."

The FCC’s new rules, ...approved on a final 3-2, party-line vote on December 21, take McChesney’s first step.

Network neutrality sounds simple – force phone and cable companies to treat every bit of information the same way – but modern networks are incredibly complex, with millions of lines of code in every router, and constantly evolving.

Making sure services like VoIP, video conferencing, and telemedicine (not to mention the next great thing that hasn’t been invented yet – and likely never will be under these regulations) can be handled intelligently by networks is necessary to make the Internet work, but every new innovative network practice will now be subject to the regulatory interference of the FCC.

These networks cost billions of dollars to build and maintain, and if there is uncertainty about getting a good return on that investment, private investment will dry up. And then government will step in,

“divest them from control,” and spend billions of our tax dollars on a government-owned and controlled Internet.

According to media reports, many of the largest Internet service providers are willing to accept the new regulations, because they believe the costs of complying are less than the ongoing uncertainty they have suffered as the issue played out over the past two years. It’s an understandable assessment, especially in light of the Chicago-style shakedown tactics the FCC has used, threatening the even more draconian option of directly reclassifying the Internet as a public utility, taking a big shortcut down McChesney’s proposed path to government control.

But there is reason to doubt an FCC that has been so obsessed with these regulations is likely to restrain itself from applying its newly created powers in unpredictable, expensive, and dangerous ways. Indeed we have already seen this Commission ignore:

1.A near-total lack of support in Congress, where over 300 members signed letters of opposition to FCC Internet regulation, and just 27 have sponsored Rep. Ed Markey’s bill to impose network neutrality rules. The bill has not even been introduced in the Senate.

2.A devastating unanimous decision of the DC circuit court of appeals in Comcast v. FCC, which eviscerated the Commission’s claims to have the jurisdiction to regulate the Internet. (We can only hope that court will similarly reject the latest regulations.)

3.An electoral tidal wave for smaller government, less spending, and less regulation. In particular, the election including an embarrassing display on the network neutrality issue by the Progressive Change Campaign Committee, which touted a net neutrality pledge signed by 95 candidates. ALL 95 LOST.

Progressive Change Campaign Committee is funded directly by George Soros
http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/groupProfile.asp?grpid=7625

With influencers like

John Podesta,
http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/individualProfile.asp?indid=1626

who chaired Obama’s transition team, openly calling for Obama to continue pushing his hard left agenda inside the executive branch, the FCC’s Internet regulations set up a perfect test-case for Congress to step in and stand up to the administration. (Despite FCC being officially “independent,” there are White House fingerprints all over this. Chairman Genachowski is a close friend of the president’s and one of the most frequent White House visitors.)

Congress should act immediately next year to overturn the FCC’s network neutrality regulations with a joint resolution of disapproval under the Congressional Review Act, which the new Republican majority can pass in the House and which can then be forced onto the Senate floor with 30-senator petition. It cannot be filibustered and would need just 51 votes to pass.

Obama could veto it, but to do so he would have to take full personal responsibility for ending the most remarkable driver of economic growth, innovation, and free expression we have in this country: the free-market, unregulated Internet.

Congress must show the White House that the strategy of pushing hard left inside the executive branch won't stand. Congress must do what the American people asked for in this election: stop Obama's big government agenda.

The California Energy Commission in September 2010 published its 226-page Appliance Efficiency Regulations, whereby the 100-watt incandescent light bulb will be outlawed at midnight on December 31, 2010.

Imagine 100-watt incandescent light bulbs as contraband in California -- persona non gratis -- but illegal immigrants get free tuition -- amigo de bienvenida.

Smuggling bootleg light bulbs into California would be a piece of cake. Just stuff them inside bales of marijuana. Or line up eight packs in the cargo bays of Greyhound buses carrying illegals on the express lane from Tijuana to any of two dozen sanctuary cities. Hey, wave 'em on in, there's nothing to check there! Ten-four!

I see no diff in incandescent vs. flourescent. The latter lasts a lot longer, too. Bunch of whining by poor mothefuckers who apparently can't afford to splurge the extra 2 bones for the better bulb.

I don't know, I am color blind.

There were some black people who owned some black slaves, and there were some black people who owned some white slaves too.

There was slavery in Canada too, they called them servants.There were no Confederate Ships that brought any slaves to America.The last Battles/skirmishes of the War of Northern Aggression took place North of the Artic Circle.

You don't know what you're talking about. The government has no place in preventing ISPs from raping us up the ass in the same way the cable companies do. Every one of those "high efficiency" bulbs I have bought have been pieces of crap....sensitive to direction of mounting, and limited life. There is no way that a pile of those crappy bulbs in the trash bin is more efficient than a single incandescent.

Seems most don't realize they will soon be licensing you to be able to have a spot on the internet, perhaps even contract with an ISP.

Seems most don't realize they will soon need a permit/license to travel
... this is what the TSA is doing in your airports, and soon will be in you train depots, buses, even Walmarts ...

Seems most don't realize, under the new food and safety bill, you will soon need to be licensed to grow and sell vegetables from a garden ...

The attack is on many fronts ... and the ignorant masses are asleep. If they knew what this translates into, they would all be joining state militias and purchasing weapons ...

Because, it harbors great dangers, most child molesters, rapists, sex murders, etc. have lots of such materials around. Reading back though any number of articles on such criminals being apprehended, you will notice they all revolve around this one trait ... even the recent molester for TSA, frisking women and children at airports, had loads on his computer.

http://www.thebostonchannel.com/r/26165594/detail.html

The Constitution guarantees you no right to be a danger to others ... simply put, your rights end trump when they bump into anothers'. Until then, you should be granted freedom ... with speech, it can be summed up simply, "I may differ with what you say, never your right to say it." However, if you yell FIRE! in a theater, you endanger others and their right to safety ... the supreme court used to be able to make such judgments, rationally, they no longer seem capable.

I used them for my pump house in the winter..... just plug them into a 32deg switch and it kept my pipes in the pump house warm all winter.

I suppose you can use heat tape instead but the 100w light bulb was so cheap and simple.

The Civil war began and you just don't know it

....Look at the Leftist attacks on the people that raise their heads above the crowd, the Liberals/Socialists viciously attempt to destroy them.

Joe the Plumber and Palin and Now Wilson and dozens in between.
NOW JOE LIEBERMAN AND BEN NELSON Mary Landreau Bribed and threatened by Progressive-Socialist in the government and the list continues to grow as the intimidation/extortion and veiled threats grow.

Government bureaucrats and Leftists attacking on every front, Internet hacking attacks, frivolous legal attacks to consume energy and money,

Personal attacks and IRS attacks on opponents and their family and attacks on the Constitution and the freedom it guarantees. Propaganda attacks are coordinated across the Liberal Media the Unions and the Executive Branch and the Progressive-Socialist Caucus in Congress and community organizing groups related to ACORN and their foot soldiers like SEIU camped out on executives front lawns.

The resulting pattern of hate, intimidation, extortion and tyranny is triggering more and more retaliation by more and more extreme methods from many more of we the little people. The Government and its bureaucrats are attacking the Constitution and the freedoms it secures. The more the Government and Leftists attack the constitution and people, the more we see a pattern of citizens retaliating against the Government.

Leftists are targeting the Constitution and using a tactic that says it's a living document that changes without any amendments , that process is undermining our freedom, and our Legal system is also being attacked. The (unconstitutional)case law approach that says Judges can change the meaning of a law without that "new version" of the law ever being voted on by our Representatives is circumventing the Constitutional process for making a law. If a law has a new meaning, other than what it had when signed into law, then it needs to have the "new meaning" (that was written by a Judge) passed by the peoples representatives vote.... or the "law" is NOT constitutional. The courts are skipping a few steps in the process to add a law into the body of law.

The Progressive-Socialists and Government bureaucrats and elected Leftists have been using that living document tactic for a long time, they've also adopted Saul Alinsky's plan to "target their opponents" and viciously destroy them on a personal level, these Progressive-Socialists even try to destroy_the_Families to help destroy anyone that would show signs of organizing an opposition into a cohesive resistance to the Leftist Government steam roller. Much as they have used government to destroy the standard family unit of a Father, Mother and children and replaced the Father with a government check. Remember that Leftists say that "the ends Justify the means" so no method is too heinous to fulfill their goals of Socialism.

We haven't yet progressed to large battles with shooting in the streets. This is a war of atrition, as with wars in the past the plan is to slowly over time wear down the enemy take away their freedom until they capitulate, but we do have some violence and protests and subversive sabotage by the Leftist/Communist. They try to use the United Nations as a supreme authority(higher) than our own constitution to further their Leftist goals of marginalizing our constitution and laws. Violence at Leftist/communist protests for Global Warming and other Leftist programs like ELF and their ECO-terrorists and SEIU attacking Capitalists and Tea Party people.

Obama has declared war on "his" enemy and they are us

In response to the Socialists bureaucracy we are seeing the beginning of a pattern of retaliation by our citizenry, against these Socialist bureaucracies as they're ignoring the Constitution and limiting our freedom and ability to maintain our family structure and engage in life without the government looking over our shoulders day-in and day-out.

The left has created a new front in their war on the Constitution and it is the "Battle against capitalism", Obama the Socialist_In_Chief has decided to attack our own Capitalism as another battle in the war against the Constitution and "we the people that ratified that Constitution" the constitution that limits Federal power, in the midst of a foreign war he has increased his governments hostility against our own people and our own rule of law to further his Socialist agenda.

The Progressive-Socialists have diverted the interest in winning in Afghanistan toward the attack and domination of the economy, for Socialism over Capitalism and for the Federal Government over our Constitution and over "We the People" .

This War is being waged here and now whether you're aware or not, you're also a victim of this war that has been claiming the defeat of your freedom and burring them under layers and layers of "(il)legal" minutia. The Federal Government has overflowed its constitutional riverbanks and we are being flooded with government interference that's trying to drown us in Progressive-Socialist regulations and micro manage our lives.

If you really wanted to get even with them, invite them over for a cup of tea. Use a big kettle for the tea, and when the two of you are done, you can watch the water cool in the kettle, wasting many, many BTU's! For effect, just remark, "The stupid arses demanding all the kettle be big are WASTING a LOT of energy." (and shake your head sideways with a sad look on your face ...) ROFLOL

Slavery WAS a considered normal in many countries up until the very end of the 20th century. Still exists in some parts of Africa,Middle East,South Asia...Why single out just a single US state,like Mississipi ???

Yeah, I remember when you assholes said the same sort of thing about Ethonal. It was going to be better for the environment, it was going to make America energy independent. It was going to be great.

Now, we find out that it's more expensive, it's actually MORE poluting, it's crappy for the engines, and, oh my, it CAUSES MASS STARVATION!!!!

Now we're being forced to buy light blubs that are toxic, more expensive, fades artwork, furniture and wall paper, and tend to burn out at about the same rate as real light bulbs.

Oh, and we're being insulted when we question this insane law.

Usually 1/5th of the Militia is FBI Agents/Informants.
* Most of their 'funding' is channeled to them from government sources.

-and- 1/10th ATF Agents/Informants.
* Most of their 'weapons' are channeled
to them from government sources.

+plus+ 1/20th CIA Agents/Informants.
* Most of their 'targets' are chosen for them by government sources.

Without US Federal Government Support
most 'Civil' Militias would not exist.

You will start getting decent signals with an antenna 50 ft long and 20 Ft. in the air ... if you can't start there, a more modest attempt will probably motivate, you the higher the better and 120 ft will bring in some excellent DX on the old rig.

Try to keep it away from any noise sources, if possible, such as power lines, electric fence (unless you want to shut the fence down when you use it.

Hard to say what would best for you.

Even if the best you can do is 20 ft x 10 ft high, it will show you the benefit of going longer and higher!

THIS:
"For the ranging codes and navigation message to travel from the satellite to the receiver, they must be modulated onto a carrier frequency. In the case of the original GPS design, two frequencies are utilized; one at 1575.42 MHz (10.23 MHz ï¿½ 154) called L1; and a second at 1227.60 MHz (10.23 MHz ï¿½ 120), called L2."

galvanized steel electric fence wire.

Run an Insulated Copper Wire as your Antenna's feed-in-line into your Radio.
Use 2~3 Wire Clamps to connect the Wires together.
http://www.kickthefog.com/Wire%20Clamp.jpg

Connect the Insulated Antenna Wire feed-in-wire to the Antenna Terminal at the back of your Radio.

A good earthen ground {8-Ft Ground Rod} and a Ground Wire to the Radio's Ground Terminal on the back of the Radio is recommended.

Turning Off the Electric Fence is a nice Idea.
Turn it 'Off' when you are ready to Listen to the Radio at Night and Turn it 'On' when you Start your Coffee in the Morning. {good habits}

Starbucks Imported Coffee Costs a Gallon of Gas :
To Produce {The Waste}

North-Eastern 'Progressives' who also used Forced Physically Unfit up into the 1950s...some claim beyond...

'The Cause' of the Progressive Agenda : The Practice of Infant-Cide {Baby-Killing} of all those they Judge to {a Drain on 'Good' Society} knows NO Racial Barrier.

The Liberal-Socialist Mantra :

Four years ago, Warren Buffett, the third richest man on the planet, said, "Of course there is a class war, but it's my class, the rich class, that is waging the war, and we're winning."

This mid-term election in the United States is a front of the class war. Business interests and the wealthy have declared war against anything that dares to impose controls on them, limit their activities or touch their fortunes, and they say so, explicitly and openly.

The vast majority of funds that are invested in what is already the most expensive mid-term election in history (it is expected to exceed, perhaps by far, 3.5 billion dollars) comes from billionaire donors, companies and groups representing the wealthy class.

For example, the U.S. Chamber of Commerce has invested some $75 million in this election, almost all to support Republican candidates. In January, Chamber president Thomas Donohue said his association intended "to carry out the biggest and strongest voter-education effort and promotion of issues in our nearly one-century-old history." He is keeping his promise.

The organization American Crossroads, a project of Karl Rove, former campaign and political strategist for George W. Bush, receives donations of up to one million dollars from wealthy donors to support conservative candidates across the country.

Multinational companies channel funds through these organizations (using laws that allow them to conceal the identity of some donors) to promote their corporate agendas to weaken government control over their operations, the impact of health reform, efforts to curb the change in climate and other things considered "anti-business" that inhibit business. They also promote policies that favor "free enterprise" and "free trade."

Many companies take advantage of a recent decision by the Supreme Court of the United States (known as the Citizens United case) that gave companies the same rights of "freedom of expression" enjoyed by individuals. Through this decision, they can fund propaganda for or against candidates to promote their agenda.

That ruling maintained that "independent expenditures" made by companies in the electoral debate "do not lead to corruption or the appearance of corruption" and though they "can generate influence on, or access to, elected officials, that does not imply that these officials are corrupt. And the appearance of influence or access will not cause voters to lose faith in this democracy."

This was denounced as a serious abuse of the democratic process by champions of electoral reforms who seek to reduce the influence of money in elections.

You deleted all the previous and changed the subject.

The OP asserted that Ethanol as a fuel is depriving people of food.

That was a change from the claimed issue of California and light bulbs the subject of this thread.

An issue that seem to be false since the standards for light bulbs that were cited did not come from California's government.

What do you have to say about the subject of this thread?

Government read "1984" by George Orwell and somehow thought it was a game plan for establishing a new world order.

Please, someone tell them, it was written as a science fiction horror novel from the mid 1900's!

It was meant to shock, anger and sell a lot of books to Americans ... our parents and grandparents would have hung the jerks by the gonads for even contemplating such criminal actions against American citizens!

Great. Just great ...

Now I am not even going to be safe going into walmart. They know it is almost required of true blue blood American patriots to attack such blatant forms of oppression and attack on American citizens.

Then the government can respond with even more oppression and justification for total governmental control of the people, then a counter response by the people ...

A decade or so later, most likely, a physical revolution will restore order and power back to the people ... when will the power hungry criminals learn, American citizens won't allow themselves to be governed and controlled by criminals?

Finally, because the CFLs use way less electricity, the POWER PLANTS put a lot less mercury in the environment. So looking at the big picture and the total environment, CFLs add way less mercury burden.

Yes, they are more expensive -- newer technology, longer life (see below). You get what you pay for.

Why? Same number of lumens output as the incandescents that they replace and the same color temperature (in degrees Kelvin) of the incandescents they replace. No scientific reason in the world why they would make things fade faster. This "complaint" is pure hokum.

Not true unless you are buying the really, really cheap "Brand X" CFLs. It is a -proven- fact that decent CFLs have a much longer life than incandescents.

Actually, it's not.

Flourescents do not produce the same spectra as incandescents.
They may have the same average color temperature, but like white LED's, with a higher blue and UV output than incandescents, the 'warm' white color temperature, is achieved by adding red output to the phosphor until the average color temperature is about the same as an incandescent, and the eye can't discern a difference. The average is the same, but the actual spectra produced are dramatically different.

Yes, flourescents do promote more rapid fading, depending on the pigments exposed.

I have had to replace my CFL's at about the same rate as average price incandescents. Brand appears to be irrelevant. Cheap generic, or branded GE and Philips, the failure rate is about the same.

In fact, the longest life bulb I've ever used was Halogena by Philips. More than twice the life of any CFL's I've used, or Philips non-halogen tungsten.

Fluorescent lights have been known to degrade food quality in the stores. Clear/translucent plastic containers for milk or juice help the process. Vegetables and fruits also suffer. Nourishment is secondary to

An Alternative:

Install dimmers on all incandescent switches.
Install incandescent bulbs for bright lighting when needed.
Most of the time there's no need for full lighting so use the dimmers.

Result: Less electricity used. Bulbs last "forever."
(Incidentally the efficiency is lower -- so what?)

I have spent $1.98 on a dimmer and I have spent $30.00 on a dimmer, I see no real difference.

However, I will admit, even CFL's generate noise (and some are worse than others, and old, failing units can be worse of all.) I took a weekend and placed a .001 uf, .01, and .1 -- 1,000 volt caps across all my lights ... the noise is now insignificant ...

That was a change from the claimed issue of California and light bulbs the subject of this thread.

An issue that seem to be false since the standards for light bulbs that were cited did not come from California's government.

Actually, the link has both Federal and State standards, and it does indeed seem to curtail sales of incandescent lamps, over a several year period, dropping the maximum allowed wattage a bit each year, ending with a maximum of something like 27 watts by 2014.

You must have missed the part about the toxic mercury in the flourescent bulbs, and how you van't just throw them in the trash when they burn out. But go ahead, spend your extra $2 for lights that don't light as well, and are a toxic hazard.

The old saying "Live and Learn" comes to mind, doesn't it?

For anyone who cares to research this subject, you'll find much "corporate soothsaying" on web.archive.org by browsing the iBiquity web site as it appeared 7 or 8 years ago. For example, see this transcript of the official launch of IBOC at NAB in 2002:

http://web.archive.org/web/20030405102702/ibiquity.com/press/pr/040802.htm

Notable 2002 quotes from Mr. Struble:

"... in terms of robustness, what we define as performance against interference, the IBOC is much more durable than existing analog."

"In terms of coverage, the answer is it replicates the existing analog coverage, and that is all it can do. Not technically, but because of a regulatory reason. We could easily boost the IBOC power, but guess what, then that steps on the station next door."

In response to a question about nighttime AM IBOC operation: "What the NRSC did say though, and we think this was a great vote of confidence, is, rather than bog down the process and wait for those nighttime results, we know we love it in the daytime, we know it represents, I think their words, a revitalization of the AM band.... We believe we will have a nighttime system; we just need to do a little bit more testing. I would like to add though, even as we speak, this is the most thoroughly tested system in US broadcasting history."

On the broadcaster licensee fee: "Yes, there is a software license, which is paid to us for the use of the system. It's a small number, based essentially on the station's FCC fee, so the stations which will benefit more and which are most able to pay, will pay a little bit more. The stations which are non-commercial, or smaller stations will pay a little bit less."

Finally, Bob Stuble's 2002 prediction for near-total conversion of stations to IBOC: "You know, you've got 13,000 stations out there if my numbers are correct, I think we sell, guys in the industry, about 1,000 transmitters a year, 800 to 1,000, something like that. So, we have always assumed something like an eight to ten year transition period. If that were to get done in four to five years, instead of eight to ten, I would hazard a guess that these guys would be able to meet that need. Anything else?"

You can find more at: http://web.archive.org/web/*/http://ibiquity.com

Color temperature is a quantitative measure. The higher the number in kelvins, the more blue the shade. Variations and inconsistencies exist among manufacturers. For example, some CFLs have a color temperature of 3,500 K [relatively low UV/fading], while other lamps with a daylight label have color temperatures of at least 5,000 K [higher blue/UV]. Your particular mileage may vary, but fading with CFLs does not HAVE to be an issue.

The average rated life of a CFL is between 8 and 15 times that of incandescents. CFLs typically have a rated lifespan of between 6,000 and 15,000 hours, whereas incandescent lamps are usually manufactured to have a lifespan of 750 hours or 1,000 hours. With -either- type of bulb, longevity will be related to the line voltage and how rapidly the bulbs are off/on cycled. However, given identical voltage and cycling, CFLs are clearly superior in terms of life. It is unclear why you are having such bad luck.

No present change in incandescent lamps for autos...although much lighting has been replaced with LEDs and backlit LCDs.

Change is on the way.

Century old incandescent technology is passï¿½, dead, tot.

One way or another incandescent lighting for all purposes is on the way out.

Why not one LED and run some fiber optics to the rooms? That isn't my idea, I read about that somewhere else a couple of months ago.

I think some cars already have exterior LED lights.

You know, the irony is that ethanol is a better anti-knock additive to gasoline than the petrochemical products the oil industry promotes. And they've known that since the Model T. It's just that John D. Rockefeller was unwilling to surrender 10% of the nation's gas tanks to farmers. Otherwise ethanol would have been mixed into gasoline since the late 20's. And there never would have been lead tetraethyl.

And, with the additional benefits of oxygenation, and it's deliquescent nature, preventing moisture lock and gas line freeze, ethanol turns out to be a very useful additive.

But the political skirmishing over ethanol, and the attachment to the issues of foreign oil, and the global warming noise, have tainted ethanol's perception as an effective additive, and made it the political shuttlecock it's become.

3500K matches candle light and incandescent lighting.

We become so accustomed to orange/yellow lighting at night that we think that's the way it ought to be.

"Daylight" lamps more closely reproduce colors correctly indoors and, I believe, when prejudices are overcome, will become the standard.

CFL's a good first step away from the inefficient incandescent lamp.

The next step is even MORE efficient: LEDs where both color and brightness can easily be controlled by the user.

So, all you RRR regressives keep on fighting progress while world leaves you behind.

Again, an average figure, achieved by offsetting the higher blue/UV with more longer wavelengths in the phosphor. The average CT is 3500, but the output is still higher in UV.

Real world use is not the same as that measured in a laboratory.
Yes, CFL's should last longer than incandescents. By an order of magnitude in some cases.

In reality, however, CFL's fail much earlier than the service life claimed for them. I get better life out of a Philips Halogena.

An interesting irony is that the flourescent tubes in my detached garage have never been replaced in the 6 years I've been in this building. While the incandescents have.

CFL's are going to be the DAT of lighting--an intermediate step into a new paradigm to be quickly surpassed by other technologies currently on the rise.

That's where it's going to go. I've been experimenting with LED lighting for 10 years, now, building my own systems as I go. Commercial LED lighting is still anemic, and not as long-term stable as claimed for it, except in monochromatic applications.

But it's evolving quickly, and is on track to become the defacto standard in less than a decade. Leaving CFL's in the dust.

When CFL's dropped in price some years ago, I swapped out every incandescent lamp where a CFL would fit.
After some initial "infant mortality" in the new CFL lamps they have stabilized and remain reliable.

There is NO flicker
There is NO noise.
There is little heat.

These lamps make a significant cut in my air conditioning costs in season.

it has been said that the history of almost all of the Jewish holidays can be summed up succinctly: "They wanted to kill us; we won. Let's eat." Why has anti-Semitism been so pervasive in so many countries, in so many time periods and for so many reasons? (One begins to wonder. Perhaps there is something wrong with the Jews and Judaism? After all, there is an old Yiddish saying -- "If one person calls you a donkey, ignore him; if two people call you a donkey, buy a saddle.")

Between the years 250 CE and 1948 CE - a period of 1,700 years - Jews have experienced more than eighty expulsions from various countries in Europe - an average of nearly one expulsion every twenty-one years. Jews were expelled from England, France, Austria, Germany, Lithuania, Spain, Portugal, Bohemia, Moravia and seventy-one other countries.

Historians have classified six explanations as to why people hate the Jews:

1. Economic -- "We hate Jews because they possess too much wealth and power."
2. Chosen People -- "We hate Jews because they arrogantly claim that they are the chosen people."
3. Scapegoat -- "Jews are a convenient group to single out and blame for our troubles."
4. Deicide -- "We hate Jews because they killed Jesus."
5. Outsiders, -- "We hate Jews because they are different than us." (The dislike of the unlike.)
6. Racial Theory -- "We hate Jews because they are an inferior race."

As we examine the explanations, we must ask -- Are they the causes for anti-Semitism or excuses for Anti-Semitism? The difference? If one takes away the cause, then anti-Semitism should no longer exist. If one can show a contradiction to the explanation, it demonstrates that the "cause" is not a reason, it is just an excuse. Let's look at some contradictions:

1. Economic -- The Jews of 17th- 20th century Poland and Russia were dirt poor, had no influence and yet they were hated.

2. Chosen People -- a) In the late 19th century, the Jews of Germany denied "Choseness." And then they worked on assimilation. Yet, the holocaust started there. b) Christians and Moslems profess to being the "Chosen people," yet, the world and the anti-Semites tolerate them.

3. Scapegoat -- Any group must already be hated to be an effective scapegoat. The Scapegoat Theory does not then cause anti-Semitism. Rather, anti-Semitism is what makes the Jews a convenient scapegoat target. Hitler's ranting and ravings would not be taken seriously if he said, "It's the bicycle riders and the midgets who are destroying our society."

4. Deicide -- a) the Christian Bible says the Romans killed Jesus, though Jews are mentioned as accomplices (claims that Jews killed Jesus came several hundred years later). How come the accomplices are persecuted and there isn't an anti-Roman movement through history? b) Jesus himself said, "Forgive them [i.e., the Jews], for they know not what they do." The Second Vatican Council in 1963 officially exonerated the Jews as the killers of Jesus. Neither statement of Christian belief lessened anti-Semitism.

5. Outsiders -- With the Enlightenment in the late 18th century, many Jews rushed to assimilate. Anti-Semitism should have stopped. Instead, for example, with the Nazis came the cry, in essence: "We hate you, not because you're different, but because you're trying to become like us! We cannot allow you to infect the Aryan race with your inferior genes."

6. Racial Theory -- The overriding problem with this theory is that it is self-contradictory: Jews are not a race. Anyone can become a Jew - and members of every race, creed and color in the world have done so at one time or another.

Every other hated group is hated for a relatively defined reason. We Jews, however, are hated in paradoxes: Jews are hated for being a lazy and inferior race - but also for dominating the economy and taking over the world. We are hated for stubbornly maintaining our separateness - and, when we do assimilate - for posing a threat to racial purity through intermarriages. We are seen as pacifists and as warmongers; as capitalist exploiters and as revolutionary communists; possessed of a Chosen-People mentality, as well as of an inferiority complex. It seems that we just can't win.

Now we know what are NOT the reasons for anti-Semitism.

They're on a couple of frequencies in the 1-2 GHz band.

dig, dig, 1575.42 MHz and 1227.6 MHz.

And then it gets complicated. The buzzword is Direct Sequence Spread Spectrum.

There's a digital circuit called a pseudo-random number generator that generates what looks like a random sequence of bits. But if you have two such circuits, you can transmit that signal with one, and the other (in a receiver), will be able to match (correlate) the data it receives so that you can know where in the counting sequence of the random generator at the transmitter is operating at. In other words, the time at the transmitter. To an resolution of the bit rate that's transmitted.
For GPS it's around 1 MHz and 10 MHz. Since time is distance, that's 300 or 30 meters resolution.

Next, there's a data stream that gives the satellite's particulars. (What bird, what time it is to some offical standard, where it is, etc...).
This is transmitted at some slow rate, 50 bits per second, as I remember.
Phase Shift keyed, I think. This gets combined with the spreading signal to a fuzzy blob of RF at the microwave frequency given above.

The receiver then looks the frequencies with a set of fancy digital filters that match the spread spectrum signals. (One trick with spread spectrum is that you can have more than one transmitter on the same frequency at the same time. So the one receiver can be looking at a half a dozen or more satellites at the same time). Each one of these receiver channels, when matched up, will give the time, and also the data stream for a satellite. Then the receiver can take this data, and calculate the time difference for pairs of satellites and with their known position from the data stream, calculate the position on the earth where this receiver's antenna is.

Up there at the lumber camp, in between your stints as a prostitute, do you perhaps cook up a pan or two of termites?

Actually it does, and then if you hurt someone the constitution provides for "Justice". You have a right to carry a gun, just no right to shoot people without just cause.

Heck; some people think you're "a danger to others" merely by existing.

The US Constitution doesn't pretend to contain an exhaustive list of all our rights, but still, I have the right to do actual harm to someone or even kill them in certain cases.

However, in general, I have no right to initiate the use of force against others.

Ceiling lights in Minn. send coded Internet data
By CHRIS WILLIAMS, Associated Press Chris Williams, Associated Press 2 hrs 9 mins ago

ST. CLOUD, Minn. ï¿½ Flickering ceiling lights are usually a nuisance, but in city offices in St. Cloud, they will actually be a pathway to the Internet.

The lights will transmit data to specially equipped computers on desks below by flickering faster than the eye can see. Ultimately, the technique could ease wireless congestion by opening up new expressways for short-range communications.

The first few light fixtures built by LVX System, a local startup, will be installed Wednesday in six municipal buildings in this city of 66,000 in the snowy farm fields of central Minnesota.

The LVX system puts clusters of its light-emitting diodes, or LEDs, in a standard-sized light fixture. The LEDs transmit coded messages ï¿½ as a series of 1s and 0s in computer speak ï¿½ to special modems attached to computers.

A light on the modem talks back to the fixture overhead, where there is sensor to receive the return signal and transmit the data over the Internet. Those computers on the desks aren't connected to the Internet, except through these light signals, much as Wi-Fi allows people to connect wirelessly.

LVX takes its name from the Latin word for light, but the underlying concept is older than Rome; the ancient Greeks signaled each other over long distances using flashes of sunlight off mirrors and polished shields. The Navy uses a Morse-coded version with lamps.

The first generation of the LVX system will transmit data at speeds of about 3 megabits per second, roughly as fast as a residential DSL line.

Mohsen Kavehrad, a Penn State electrical engineering professor who has been working with optical network technology for about 10 years, said the approach could be a vital complement to the existing wireless system.

He said the radio spectrum usually used for short-range transmissions, such as Wi-Fi, is getting increasingly crowded, which can lead to slower connections.

"Light can be the way out of this mess," said Kavehrad, who is not involved in the LVX project.

But there are significant hurdles. For one, smart phones and computers already work on Wi-Fi networks that are much faster than the LVX system.

Technology analyst Craig Mathias of the Farpoint Group said the problems with wireless congestion will ease as Wi-Fi evolves, leaving LVX's light system to niche applications such as indoor advertising displays and energy management.

LVX Chief Executive Officer John Pederson said a second-generation system that will roll out in about a year will permit speeds on par with commercial Wi-Fi networks. It will also permit lights that can be programmed to change intensity and color.

For the city, the data networking capability is secondary. The main reason it paid a $10,000 installation fee for LVX is to save money on electricity down the line, thanks to the energy-efficient LEDs. Pederson said one of his LED fixtures uses about 36 watts of power to provide the same illumination that 100 watts provides with a standard fluorescent fixture.

Besides installation costs, customers such as St. Cloud will pay LVX a monthly fee that's less than their current lighting expenses. LVX plans to make money because the LED fixtures are more durable and efficient than standard lighting. At least initially, the data transmission system is essentially a bonus for customers.

Pederson said the next generation of the system should get even more efficient as fixtures become "smart" so the lights would dim when bright sunlight is coming through a window or when a conference room or hallway is empty.

Because the lights can also change color, Pederson said they could be combined with personal locators or tiny video cameras to help guide people through large buildings. The lights could show a trail of green lights to an emergency exit, for instance.

While Kavehrad and Mathias credited LVX for being the first company in the United States to bring the technology to market, Kavehrad said it trails researchers and consumer electronics companies in Japan and Korea in developing products for visible-light networks.

Pederson's previous company, 911 EP, built high-powered LED roof lights for squad cars and other emergency vehicles. He said he sold the company in 2002. He said the visible-light network grew out his interest in LEDs that goes to the mid-1990s.

The Minneapolis-St. Paul International Airport, which pays for 24-hour lighting and replacing fluorescent bulbs on high ceilings, is considering an LVX system, said Jeffrey W. Hamiel, executive director of the Metropolitan Airports Commission.

The system might include mounting cameras on the light fixtures to bolster the airport security system, but the real attraction is the savings on electricity and maintenance.

"Anything we can do to save costs is worth consideration," he said.

Michael Williams, the city administrator in St. Cloud, said the city had been considering LVX for some time.

"It's pretty wild stuff," he said. "They have been talking about it with us for couple of years, and frankly it took a while for it to sink in."

Little light...plenty of heat.

If the lamp's purpose is for generating light, you have reduced its

I see Bayer (of Aspirin fame) are doing their fair share. They insist on continuing the use of nicotine in their farm products. The stuff is responsible for billions of bees getting wiped out.

I agree with you Burr - SW is great down here at the Southern tip of Afrika.
Lots of major broadcasters beaming in good English programming every day.
I was surprised to hear even Ireland relaying SW programming here = great listening.

How ever I must agree with those living in Europe and N. America that the pickings are slim there. On trips there this year I was disappointed at the lack of SW in those developed countries. However the ham bands are very active in those areas and MW DXing is also fabulous in N. America. so radio is by no means dead.

Wrong word for SWL newsgroup. We hate dimmers! Run your Edison bulbs in series. Split the Volts in half and they'll burn nicely forever (tower

Nobody is banning incandescent bulbs. There is a new standard for efficient space illumination devices, but not automotive, or decorative, or panel lamps.

Seems all the older tube SW radios had a GND (ground) screw by the ANT (antenna) screw. Does connecting this ground screw make the antenna receive better, or is it just for lightning protection? Or maybe it's not needed at all, but I'd think it's there for some reason. I have not seen this on modern portable SW radios, but seems they just rely on a rabbit ear antenna, which is not very effective.

If this ground does serve a purpose, what's the best thing to connect it to? Separate dedicated ground rod, or just connect it to any metal water pipe or the house electrical system's ground (such as a grounded outlet box).

It does help, more on the lower bands than the upper, but some on all bands. Definitely NOT lightning protection, as even a near strike would fry the front end of the radio.

Most modern portables either have a coaxial antenna input, which has a ground connection, or no external antenna connection at all.

As for good grounds, separate ground spike is best, with a cold water pipe (not hot water nor gas line) being a runner up. Using the ground lug on an AC outlet may "work", but it's not a good idea.

Guns "harbor" NO dangers. I have carried one for decades, sleep with one under my pillow, have one in my work desk drawer, there is one hidden in my car ...

Nope, from personal experience I can say, guns will NEVER hurt anyone ...

Now human beings are much different. They might kill you with a knife, they might kill you with poison, they might shove you in front of an oncoming auto, or off a building, they might beat you to death with a baseball bat, they might shoot you with a gun, etc. ...

But, I can guarantee you, guns are NO danger!

No, you are quite confused. The God given right of "self preservation" is upheld and implemented in the Constitution. If someone comes to do you great bodily harm or kill you, you have the right to kill them.

Quite different from "being danger", you are "ending the danger to your right of being secure in your right to life!"

Currently, in just day to day life, you can see LEDs being used in traffic signals, tail lights in all forms of vehicles, and a great increase in high output lamps such as in spotlights and all sizes of flashlights. In the very near future you will see vehicle headlights as well as home lighting using LEDs as a standard.
Commercial LED lighting is not going to remain "anemic" very long.
Right now you can get LED street lights with the following specs:
Power Consumption: 112W LEDs (132W total)
Replaces 250W HPS (325W total)
Expected Life: 50,000 hours (2083 days or 5.707 years)

LED Output:
Luminous Flux: 8,400lm
Color Temperature: 2700K-3000K (warm white), 4000K-4500K (natural white), 5000K-7000K (pure white)
Beam Spread: 120 degrees width, 60 degrees depth
Working Voltage: 85-264V AC, 12V or 24V AC/DC
Fits: 1.5" - 2.5" (35mm - 65mm) round pole or pipe Dimensions: 28.25" (L) x 12.5" (W) x 3.5"(H) / 715mm (L) x 315mm(W) x 90mm(H)
http://www.besthomeledlighting.com/product/SL-112W

Right now it's a pricey item but considering it's life expectancy is over 5.7 years (if left on 24/7), compared to what most municipalities use (HPS or MH), it's actually less expensive even without factoring in the smaller power requirements as the other types of lamps require replacement (based upon my own personal experience) around every 18 to 24 months due to various issues.

For the private sector, the owner of a shopping center or mall with substantial parking, the savings in the electric bill along with far less maintenance requirements could offset the intial cost per lamp in as little as the first year or two.

And then there is the fact that the other types such as HID, MV, HPS and MH have various issues such as HIDs shutting down due to any voltage drop and taking up to 10 minutes to "restrike" or MVs not liking cold environments or the Lumens depreciation of MHs or the "cycling" of HPSs.

And LEDs are a hell of a lot less damaging to the environment and pretty much non toxic compared to CFLs in the event of breakage. Plus they are much safer to manufacture to boot.

Of course none of this is likely to be news to you but a little corroboration never hurts yes?

Post-revolutionary government need not be held to the current US Constitution. Such is the result of revolution: it is done to institute new government, and those that have the power will decide what form that government will take.

That would not be done wisely, would it. A government in line with the will of God, his plans would be the only successful course.

Men had rights long before any government. Government is granted "its' rights" from men. When this is freely given, the government is just and right. When men withhold granting government the right to govern them, it is unjust and already time for revolution. In the USA, American Citizens ARE the government, the president, senate and congress our public servants ...

"When, in the course of human events, it becomes necessary for one people to dissolve the political bands which have connected them with another, and to assume among the powers of the earth the separate and equal station to which the laws of nature and of nature's God entitle them, a decent respect to the opinions of mankind requires that they should declare the causes which impel them to the separation." -- Thomas Jefferson

Whoever stold that guy's headlights, the thief made off with both of the whole headlight assemblies, including the light bulbs.It looked like a hatchet job on that truck.Price out how much money they cost.Maybe that guy said about $1,400, I don't exactly remember.If I need to replace a burnt out sealed beam headlight bulb on my 1983 Dodge van, it would only cost about seven or eight dollars.

Code recommends it. Requires in some instances that your RF ground also be bonded to the mains ground. The better solution would be to run a separate ground system. A 12' ground rod away from the building, bonded through a copper strap to the A/C ground, is a good start.

Myself, I run an 8' ground rod every 10 or 15 feet circling at a distance from the house, bonded together with a 4 inch braided copper strap, bonded to the head end of the transmission line. With the transmission line bonded again, to a 12'ground rod just before entry into the building. That rod is also bonded to the mains ground.

A very quiet set up for listening. This also insures that the antenna, transmission line, and the radios all operate at the same reference to ground, so in the event of a near-strike, everything lifts simultaneously, reducing the risk of discharge through the front end.

It may. It's just as likely, especially on a portable, to overload the front end, creating artifacts up and down the dial, and if there is a local strong enough, damage your input transistor.

No, actually that is a good thing. It would be better is all did so ...

"Too bad" are those killed by serial killers, "too bad" are those raped,
"too bad" are those murdered, etc., etc.

If they all were prepared, it they all upheld their responsibilities as Americans citizens to make the world a better place, they would be weeding out these criminal individuals, the streets would become safe to walk, criminal would become afraid of empowered individuals, home invasions would die out -- they would not know which home had a gun, and which did not -- but they would know, MOST HAD ONE!

You are an idiot and an imbecile ... and I would guess most here know ...

Lithuania actually was a surprisingly (and unusually) great place for Jews. Especially in the Middle Ages ... The 1495-1503 period was a mistake and never happened ever again as far as an official government of policy towards them . The calamities of WW I and WW II was caused by outside forces ...

#Incandescent_lights

Incandescent lights

Under the law, incandescent bulbs that produce 310–2600 lumens of light are effectively phased out between 2012 and 2014. Bulbs outside this range (roughly, light bulbs currently less than 40 watts or more than 150 watts) are exempt from the ban. Also exempt are several classes of speciality lights, including appliance lamps, "rough service" bulbs, 3-way, colored lamps, and plant lights.[23]

The phase-out of incandescent light bulbs was supported by the Alliance to Save Energy, a coalition of light bulb manufacturers, electric utilities and conservation groups. The group estimated that lighting accounts for 22% of total U.S. electricity usage, and that eliminating incandescent bulbs completely would save $18 billion per year (equivalent to the output of 80 coal plants).[24] Light bulb manufacturers also hoped a single national standard would prevent the enactment of conflicting bans and efficiency standards by state governments.

gas hoses and the eventual damage it will do to the engine, then I guess you can say it is a useful additive.

Alcohol is not corrosive to metals, In fact, it absorbs free water, and allows it to be pumped out of the tank with the gas.

Even BMW has acknowledged that it does no damage to the engine.

And as for hoses, in concentrations below 10%, no damage. There are materials for hoses, seals and diaphragms, that can withstand much greater concentrations, also without damage.

Now, methanol, which had been used as an additive in early gasohol mixtures, does extensive damage to rubber and plastic materials.

Ethanol is not as chemically active.

But still use an earthen Ground connected to the "G" Screw.

- Does connecting this ground screw make

Almost all of the time with a good Antenna and a good earthen Ground : YES !
- or is it just for lightning protection?

Yes - It is also used for Lightening Protection.
- Or maybe it's not needed at all,

Yes - It Is Needed.

- but I'd think it's there for some reason.

Yes for both an Antenna Ground and a Safety Ground.

- I have not seen this on modern portable SW radios,

Most of the time a 'portable' AM/FM Shortwave Radio uses Batteries, and the Radios are NOT connected to the House AC Electrical System; plus just using the built-in Whip Antenna. {Floating/Isolated}

- but seems they just rely on a rabbit ear antenna,
- which is not very effective.

The Radio's Whip Antenna is reasonably effective for it's size.

- If this ground does serve a purpose, what's the best thing to connect it to?

A good earthen Ground using an 8-Foot Ground
Rod and Heavy #10 AWG Copper Ground Wire.

- Separate dedicated ground rod, or just
- connect it to any metal water pipe or the
- house electrical system's ground
- (such as a grounded outlet box).

A good earthen Ground using an 8-Foot Ground
Rod and Heavy #10 AWG Copper Ground Wire.

- Thanks

hope this helps - iane ~ RHF

Roy,
Please tell us what -you- think Obama should have done. Go down in a submarine? Get his tool box, put on his swim suit and dive down over a mile? Again, PLEASE tell us what Roy thinks the prez should have done.

Hmmm...
Obama had BP put $20 billion in a TRUST FUND for the citizens whose lives, livelihood and businesses were damaged. And you call this 'extortion'? What a strange viewpoint.

Roy, sometimes (many times?) your extreme partisanship crosses over the line into simply playing the fool... :-(

“I am radical in my belief in what we can do to improve the [criminal justice] system,” Harris told the LA Times earlier this month, without elaborating much on those sentiments.

Perhaps a better description of her beliefs can be found in her track record as well as in lectures she delivered that did not receive news media attention.

WND has learned Harris was a lecturer at a 2004 symposium at the law school of the University of California at Berkeley, where she spoke alongside notorious radicals

Tom Hayden
http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/individualProfile.asp?indid=1334

and

Van Jones
http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/individualProfile.asp?indid=2406

Harris at the time was a prosecutor.

According to the Communist Party USA newszine

"...supporters of Harris campaign, eager for a pro-people attorney general, included the California Labor Federation, the Services Employees International Union, civil liberties and rights groups and independently financed campaigns backed by the labor movement and Powerpac.org, a progressive social justice organization."

When I was in Iowa, in the late 70's, there were PSA's on nearly every radio and TV station urging citizens to refrain from flushing until there was a full bowl. The state legislature debated legislative efforts to control how often and when, and with how much water toilets could be flushed. There were monitoring schemes presented, and local ordinances enacted to restrict the flushing of toilets, to the degree that during certain times of the day in the town I was living, they turned the pumps for the city well off, and banned flushing outright during those periods.

National legislation followed, some years later, restricting new construction to low volume toilets, and local communities began enacting ordinances ordering hardware and plumbing companies to dispose of their inventories of existing parts and materials for full flush toilets, forcing homeowners seeking to repair existing toilets to replace them with low flush models.

So, to answer your question, we're already there.

An RF ground is needed to improve reception. Think of the earth as one plate of a capacitor. You need to use metal to complete the capacitor.
Wire radials, poultry netting, salty bogs, have all been used. An 8' ground rod driven vertically is pretty useless for improving an antenna system.

How do you mow the yard with all of that grounding equipment?
I connect to the cold water pipe by running the wire low to the outside wall so the yard guy won't run over it with the mower.

2nd - Reducing Future 'Armed' Crimes for Years

I saw Kamala Harris at the Gay Pride parade in San Francisco in 2008. She was part of a caravan of local politicians, including Gavin Newsom, and the crowd cheered as each one drove by, and suddenly fell silent when Ms. Harris appeared.

By coincidence, June 19, 2008 was the same day Kamala Harris announced she would not seek the death penalty against Edwin Ramos, an MS-13 member and illegal alien from El Salvador, who brutally murdered a man and his two sons as they were walking through their neighborhood. The murders shocked the city, especially when it was learned that Ramos had a lengthy criminal record but had managed to avoid deportation due to the city's "sanctuary" policy.

In Ms. Harris' defense, as prosecutor she NEVER sought the death penalty against ANYONE, so Edwin Ramos wasn't being singled out for preferential treatment. However, even in a city of radical leftists, the public sentiment seemed to be that Ramos deserved to die for his crime. I could feel the mood at the parade: nobody (except me) booed her, but the silence made it clear what the public thought of her, even if they were afraid to express it aloud (as a multi-racial womyn of colour, criticizing Harris would violate political correctness).

This can be successful if the lead in wire remains insulated, and you wrap the insulated wire around the whip a few times for an inductive connection. You can adjust the sensitivity quite nicely this way depending on how may coil wraps you use.

I agree with you Burr - SW is great down here at the Southern tip of Afrika.
Lots of major broadcasters beaming in good English programming every day.
I was surprised to hear even Ireland relaying SW programming here = great listening.

How ever I must agree with those living in Europe and N. America that the pickings are slim there. On trips there this year I was disappointed at the lack of SW in those developed countries. However the ham bands are very active in those areas and MW DXing is also fabulous in N. America. so radio is by no means dead.

Have fun and good DX

The USCG was on site the night it happened and is probably still there now. The US government can only fix things with bombs and cruise missiles, otherwise they're out of tools. They then have to hope the private sector knows what it's doing. I meticulously followed the operation and saw some exemplary work by the finest people in the deep sea exploration business. Sure they threw a little chaff out once in aq while, but they have proprietary methods to protect.

Ask Coohoo about the loop current.

Why do you think they are putting the ethanol in the gas nowadays, selling ya water at $3.00USD+ is a booming business. They inject water in beef also ... same reason. Water is a booming business ... they are just getting into air with the new carbon taxes! Wait until that takes off.

Yes, my house is at 236 meters high and the mountains tower 1400 meters above me (770/4600ft).
So effectively the low angle far off DX signals get blocked and reception in Montagu is awful.

Not in the sense of the Ancient World. Today- probably partially. The original Egyptians were considered as a separate race,at one time. And the Semites were the barbarian (savages) invaders from the East. Some historians consider the Hyksos as Semites.

- Just curious.
- On a modern radio, (without a coax connector),
- if I was to connect a 50ft. (or more) outdoor wire
- to the rabbit ear using an alligator clip,
```

- would that give better reception?

! 'rabbit ear' !

Actually you point something out that the Hallicrafter S107 has Two (2) Antenna Screw Terminals A1 & A2 for 300 Ohm [TV] Twin-Lead a/o Ladder-Line for an Antenna feed-in-line.
http://pcbunn.cithep.caltech.edu/jjb/Hallicrafters/S107/IMG_3069.jpg +plus+ A Ground Screw with a Shorting/Jumper Link/Wire between A2-to-G

You could use a simple pair of TV type Rabbit Ears as a basic Indoor Shortwave Antenna connected to the Two (2) Antenna Screw Terminals.
http://www.sdpb.org/reception/images/image006.png Extend the Rabbit Ears as far as you can.

-or- You could use a simple FM Folded Dipole Antenna
as a basic Indoor Shortwave Antenna connected to the Two (2) Antenna Screw Terminals.
http://www.parts-express.com/images/item_large/210-020_L.jpg http://www.farnsworthelectronics.com/part%20images/antenn14.gif http://www.siber-sonic.com/FM_reception/etc/dipolbld.gif Stretch-out the Dipole Arms Horizontally to the max.

Note : Remove the Shorting/Jumper Link/Wire between A2-to-G when using a Rabbit Ears a/o Dipole Antenna with a Twin-Lead feed-in-line.

hope this helps - iane ~ RHF

It's not clear why you are using up electrons debating the Constitution.

Heck, everyone knows that the beloved George W. Bush went on public record saying that the Constitution "is just a piece of paper".

Now say for instance you done bought a new forty two inch tv set, or a new computer, or anything that is expensive.What are you going to do with the empty carboard box? You going to set it out front for the garbage truck to pick up? That is advertizing to the burglers out there.If it is a toaster or something most people don't care about, go ahead and set it out front.

That's no answer. What do you do with your household hazardous waste.
Hyperlinks don't count. The internet is full of disinformation. I'd like your words.

That's only in Republican areas where your city fathers are selling the infrastructure to the French. You're lucky, in some countries you can get shot for collecting rainwater.

They will need to overthrow oppressive governments and secure their own rights ...

I got into the videos depicting evidence that 9/11 was an inside job.
They get into the molten steel being discussed by fire fighters in the basements of the buildings, the nano thermite in the dust, molten steel pouring out floors of the towers, the fact building 7 was not hit by a plane, the multiple explosions, etc., etc.

It is amazing ... great conversation starters ... most people are NOT aware of all this. Alex Jones keeps mentioning it from time to time:
M-F 11:00am - 1:00pm on 12.160MHz
M-F 9:00pm - 12:00am on 4.840MHz

Well, I see a LOT of those "boys" in san fransicko ... but not that much where I live ... I mean, they show up every now-and-then, and then you don't see them anymore ... kinda' strange, I suppose ... however, I have noticed American families tend to complain about having them in the neighborhoods.

Hal and Mals Saint.Patrick's Parade (in Jackson) is the second or third longest in America, it gets longer and larger and Better every year.
More is the Reason Jackson should be renamed, Bhaile Atha Cliath.

State adviser, Marxist also want more FCC control of airwaves

“Net neutrality” rules must be implemented while the government should quintuple federal funding for public and community broadcasting, argued Ben Scott, the State Department’s recently appointed policy adviser for innovation.

http://www.keywiki.org/index.php/Ben_Scott

Scott was writing last year in a radical magazine in an article co-authored by Robert W. McChesney (left), an avowed Marxist activist who has called for the dismantlement, “brick-by-brick,” of the U.S. capitalist system, with America being rebuilt as a socialist society.

http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/individualProfile.asp?indid=2227
http://www.keywiki.org/index.php/Robert_McChesney

McChesney is the founder of the George Soros-funded Free Press, which petitions for more government control of the Internet and news media.

http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/groupProfile.asp?grpid=7103
http://www.keywiki.org/index.php/Free_Press

Scott and McChesney also recommended the U.S. impose ownership limits on local radio, TV, and cable channels while pushing for more control of the media by the FCC.

The duo were writing in the January/February 2009 edition of Tikkun Magazine, run by avowed Marxist Michael Lerner.

http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/individualProfile.asp?indid=632
http://www.keywiki.org/index.php/Michael_Lerner

Lerner has been accused of using the magazine to justify Palestinian terror and has written articles in which he suggested the 9/11 attacks were a response to U.S. policies.

“Whatever issue tops your list of priorities, real progress will be impossible unless we first change our media system,” wrote Scott and McChesney. “Currently, access to communications and control over media content are vested in the hands of corporate titans.”

The two recommended the following policy implementations:

* Restore the original mission of the Federal Communications Commission as a guardian of the public interest. The FCC must become a twenty-first-century agency focused on the digital media marketplace of ideas and commerce, with a commitment to public engagement, transparency, and accountability.

* Support ownership limits and public oversight to foster more diverse, competitive, and local ownership of radio, TV, and cable channels.

* At a minimum, quintuple the federal funding for public and community broadcasting, to at least $3 billion annually-earmarking money for children's and public affairs programming. Funding should come from fees paid by commercial licensees to the public airwaves.

* Ban all advertising on broadcast and cable TV programs where over 33 percent of the viewership is under the age of twelve. This is similar to the rules in many European nations.

* Establish "Network Neutrality" rules that guarantee free speech and a free market on the Internet by prohibiting discrimination, manipulation, and interference by network owners like Comcast or AT&T.

* Restore competition to the market in high-speed internet access to break the hold of the cable-telephone duopoly on the nation's "broadband" infrastructure.

* Transition all public subsidies for telephone networks to fund infrastructure to bring the benefits of broadband to all Americans.

* Authorize the license of more noncommercial, low-power FM radio stations in communities nationwide.

* Open antitrust investigations into vertically integrated media companies that control production and distribution through anti-competitive practices.

"Net neutrality" refers to government interference to propose a principle for users' access to networks participating in the Internet.

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=2nnyK_uMhpk

The principle states that if a given user pays for a certain level of Internet access, and another user pays for the same level of access, then the two users should be able to connect to each other at the subscribed level of access.

Just last week, FCC Commissioners voted 3-2 to approve controversial "net neutrality" rules, with the content of those rules, about 100 pages, still being rolled out.

This past May, Scott was named a policy adviser for innovation at the State Department. He previously served as director of McChesney's Free Press.

Scott authored a book, "The Future of Media," which was edited by McChesney, who doubles as a professor at the University of Illinois and is former editor of the Marxist journal Monthly Review.

http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/groupprofile.asp?grpid=7105
http://www.keywiki.org/index.php/Monthly_Review

In February 2009, McChesney wrote in a column, “In the end, there is no real answer but to remove brick-by-brick the capitalist system itself, rebuilding the entire society on socialist principles.”

The board of Free Press has included a slew of radicals, such as Obama’s former “green jobs” czar Van Jones, who resigned after it was exposed he founded a communist organization.

http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/individualProfile.asp?indid=2406
http://www.keywiki.org/index.php/Van_Jones

In May, WND reported Free Press published a study advocating the development of a “world class” government-run media system in the U.S.

Now the group is pushing a new organization, StopBigMedia.com, that advocates the downfall of “big media” and the creation of new media to “promote local ownership, amplify minority voices, support quality journalism, and bring local artists, voices and viewpoints to the airwaves.”

Free Press has ties to other members of the Obama administration.

Obama’s “Internet czar,” Susan P. Crawford, spoke at a Free Press’s May 14, 2009, “Changing Media” summit in Washington, D.C.

Crawford’s pet project, OneWebNow, lists as “participating organizations” Free Press and the controversial Association of Community Organizations for Reform Now, or ACORN.

http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/groupProfile.asp?grpid=6968
http://www.keywiki.org/index.php/ACORN

Crawford and Kevin Werbach, who co-directed the Obama transition team’s Federal Communications Commission Review team, are advisory board members at Public Knowledge, a George Soros-funded public interest group.

http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/individualProfile.asp?indid=977

A Public Knowledge advisory board member is Timothy Wu, who is also chairman of the board for Free Press.

Like Public Knowledge, Free Press also has received funds from Soros’ Open Society Institute.

And they have no idea how funny the stuff they claim is. I love to aske them:

What melted the steel, and more importantly, what supposedly kept it molten?

Sometimes, the answers they give are just dopey, but sometimes, they are amazingly bizarre. And always pretty funny.

There's a pic of firemen supposedly working above "molten steel". They don't have a clue what's so wrong with that claim.

Legend

The Old Chisholm Trail

Come along boys and listen to my tale,
I'll tell you of my troubles on the old Chisholm trail.

Come a ti yi yippee, come a ti yi yea,
Come a ti yi yippee, come a ti yi yea.

Oh, a ten-dollar hoss and a forty-dollar saddle,
And I'm goin' to punchin' Texas cattle.

Come a ti yi yippee, come a ti yi yea,
Come a ti yi yippee, come a ti yi yea.

I wake in the mornin' afore daylight,
And afore I sleep the moon shines bright.

Come a ti yi yippee, come a ti yi yea,
Come a ti yi yippee, come a ti yi yea.

It's cloudy in the west, a-lookin' like rain,
And my durned old slicker's in the wagon again.

Come a ti yi yippee, come a ti yi yea,
Come a ti yi yippee, come a ti yi yea.

No chaps, no slicker, and it's pourin' down rain,
And I swear, by gosh, I'll never night-herd again.

Come a ti yi yippee, come a ti yi yea,
Come a ti yi yippee, come a ti yi yea.

Feet in the stirrups and seat in the saddle,
I hung and rattled with them long-horn cattle.

Come a ti yi yippee, come a ti yi yea,
Come a ti yi yippee, come a ti yi yea.

The wind commenced to blow, and the rain began to fall,
Hit looked, by grab, like we was goin' to lose 'em all.

Come a ti yi yippee, come a ti yi yea,
Come a ti yi yippee, come a ti yi yea.

I don't give a darn if they never do stop;
I'll ride as long as an eight-day clock.

Come a ti yi yippee, come a ti yi yea,
Come a ti yi yippee, come a ti yi yea.

We rounded 'em up and put 'em on the cars,
And that was the last of the old Two Bars.

Come a ti yi yippee, come a ti yi yea,
Come a ti yi yippee, come a ti yi yea.

Oh, it's bacon and beans most every day,
I'd as soon be a-eatin' prairie hay.

Come a ti yi yippee, come a ti yi yea,
Come a ti yi yippee, come a ti yi yea.

I went to the boss to draw my roll,
He had it figgered out I was nine dollars in the hole.

Come a ti yi yippee, come a ti yi yea,
Come a ti yi yippee, come a ti yi yea.

Goin' back to town to draw my money,
Goin' back home to see my honey.

Come a ti yi yippee, come a ti yi yea,
Come a ti yi yippee, come a ti yi yea.

With my knees in the saddle and my seat in the sky,
I'll quit punchin' cows in the sweet by and by.

Come a ti yi yippee, come a ti yi yea,
Come a ti yi yippee, come a ti yi yea.

Water in the gas? Car won't start? Then forget about driving - stay home and pour some alcohol, whiskey or moonshine into yourself!

If the car won't run, you don't have to worry about DUI...

I didn't hear anything in the few minutes preceding the second plane shooting through the South Tower. Only the roaring jet engines as it approached the target (very loud). I missed the first plane hitting the North Tower.

I remember something about that Staten Island Ferry, a few years ago.That Ferry (I forget the name of it) wasen't built in Mississippi.A few years ago, a Ship in the Mississippi River in New Orleans crashed into a wall near the Riverwalk shopping mall.Something went wrong with the steering system, I think.I have been in that mall before.Standing in a book store and looking out a window at a Ship parked there, about forty something feet from me.

No president has ever been able to "control" what gets on the air. Despite being a Fascist, Marxist, Maoist, Hitler worshipping supposed "ultra leftist," the current one can't even prevent moneyed interests from buying control of the public airwaves until the screaming, fanatical, right wing voice is pretty much the only one anybody is allowed to hear. Although he wanted to bomb Al Jazeera, the previous president probably never felt much desire to control what got on the air, since he got an uninterrupted eight year rim job from the "liberal media" which allegedly hated him, but did an incredible job of completely hiding it.

It is completely unacceptable to conservatives to have their government telling them via something like The Fairness Doctrine that they must allow dissenting voices on the public airwaves. It is not only acceptable but desirable to conservatives to tell the public what the public thinks by using money to smash dissenting voices to smithereens like Wal Mart smashes local grocery store chains.

Whatever they saw wasn't and couldn't have been molten steel. It's not possible. What was keeping it molten? Klingon phasers? The Romulan Plasma Torpedo?

I would love to see the unedited video. I bet it's far different, or else there are some firemen who didn't know what they were seeing.

Kind of like when you troofers watch the videos and claim it means something, but often as not, it disproves your claim.

But keep on postin', snd we will keep laughing.

I don't have to be an authority, just sane. I paid attention in science class, and I've welded, so it's obvious how ridiculous many of the troofer claims are.

You're the one "Plonking" Johnny. Not me. I've been here telling you kooks to talk to an engineer for years, and you post kookpages claiming they prove something, and refuse to do so. I have science and common sense on my "side", you've got nothing but kooktardery.

If they saw some WTC molten steel, that is what they saw.How about those melted/molten vehicles?

The Keel of the U.S.S.New York Ship was made from some of that WTC steel.It was cast at Amite Foundry in Amite,Louisiana.Then it was sent to Avondale Ship Yard near New Orleans.That is where the U.S.S.New York Ship was built.There is also a Plaque inside the Ship, made/cast from some of that WTC steel.

Have you ever seen those Hambone Sez, used to be in some newspapers many years ago.Used to be in a Jackson newspaper.I think it was the Jackson Daily News newspapers.

Jensen says Scott is pretty unpopular and was unpopular the day he got elected. According to Jensen, the fact that Scott got elected is just a sign of how incredibly anti Democratic Florida voters were this year.

However, the fact that Scott has the least favorable rating of any newly elected governor in the country doesn't surprise political consultant Wayne Garcia. Garcia says Scott is not a likeable guy whether you agree or disagree with his politics or not. According to Garcia, Scott will never been Governor "Warm and Fuzzy."

That is particularly true for those who voted against Scott. We asked one Democrat what he thought when we said Rick Scott and he told us, "A crook."

But, it's not just the Democrats who have an unfavorable opinion of the new Governor. Even a majority of Republicans who voted for him have an unfavorable view of Scott.

Steve,

Are you going to listen to BBC on radio or internet for new year?

Right now (2145UT) listening to Bucharest on 6115 kHz - 15 minutes to go there until midnight- not sure if they will still be on the air-but I will listen.

It might also be a good idea to put another receiver on 7360 which fires up at 0000 out of Cyprus. 9740 is out of Singapore, and has been fading in fairly well as of late prior to 0000.

We'll see how it all works out.

Just got my logbook out, which I only use these days to mark the New Year with the BBC, and for the past two years I've used 9740.
